THE ROYAL FAMILY OF BRAZIL.

Twenty-one years have elapsed since the Prince de Joinville sought a bride in the tropic empire of Brazil. All the world knows that a stable constitutional Government in South America is Brazil, which, from the beginning of its independence, adopted the monarchical form.

The marriage of Don Pedro II with the Princess Theresa (Austria-Bourbon) of Naples resulted in the birth of four children, two sons and two daughters. The sons died in infancy; the princesses have grown up into the brilliant and accomplished womanhood. It was natural that husbands for Donna Isabella, the heir to the throne, and for Donna Leopoldina, should be sought amongst the princes of Europe.

The Princess Leopoldina, the eldest daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. Both are grandsons of Louis Philippe. The official journal of Rio de Janeiro announced that the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, in conjunction with the Count d'Eu would take place on the 15th of this month, and also the definite engagement of the Duke of Saxe with Donna Leopoldina. The French mail of October 24 will bring us intelligence of the marriage of the older sister, the future Empress.

Donna Isabella, the heir to the throne of Brazil, was born at Rio de Janeiro on the 24th of July, 1846, and was consequently eighteen last July. She is tall, finely formed and fair. Donna Isabella is a blonde, in this respect taking after her imperial father, who inherits from his Hapsburg mother fair hair and blue eyes. The education of the princesses has been the object of the constant and personal attention of the Emperor, who has employed the best professors and tutors having many cares of state, has brought his ripe scholarship to bear on the instruction of their imperial highnesses.

He is himself master of six living languages for fluent conversation and from the enjoyment of his literature, while for mere reading there is scarcely a modern tongue of which he is not fully acquainted. With the Latin, he recently informed one of our correspondents, he is as familiar as with his own tongue; to Greek and to Hebrew he has devoted great attention. His mastery, according to the testimony of eminent scholars who have visited Brazil, has always taken the deepest interest in physical science, especially in chemistry. Under such a father have the princesses received their education.

It is said by those who have long been near the imperial princess, that she is a person of great judgment, and one who inquires into the reason of things, who weighs, deliberates, and balances every question before making her decision. Such qualities are most desirable for a constitutional monarch.

Donna Leopoldina, the younger princess, was born July 13, 1847, and is now seventeen. Like her sister, she is a blonde, though not inheriting fully the Hapsburg features. She possesses great vivacity, and is said to be exceedingly happy at her betrothal. It is not known when her marriage with the Duke of Saxe will take place, but, doubtless, not many months will elapse before European Courts will have an opportunity of seeing the young princesses.

The Count d'Eu is the eldest son of the Duke of Nemours and of the Princess Victoire de Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, was born at Paris, April 28, 1842. He was scarcely six years old when, with the family of Louis Philippe, he came to England. In the quiet retreat of Claremont he received an Anglo-French education until he was seventeen, when the young Count was appointed by his royal relative, the Queen of Spain, to an under-lieutenancy in the Spanish cavalry. He was made a member of the Etat-Major of Marshal O'Donoghue in the expedition against Morocco. In one of the first combats he so distinguished himself in a cavalry charge, which he led on the plains of Tetuan, that he was decorated on the field of battle by the marshal.

His conduct from the beginning to the end of the war in Africa reflected honor upon the young officer. After the campaign was finished he entered the military school of Segovia, and there for three years completed his military and scientific studies. By his examinations he merited a lieutenancy of artillery and the sword of honor; he was also promoted to be captain of cavalry. He was in garrison at Barcelona when he received permission to return to England (May 1864), to be present at the marriage between his cousins, the Count de Paris and the daughter of the Duke of Montpensier. But few days passed after this wedding before he was designated as candidate for one of the princely marriages of Brazil.

The Count d'Eu, accompanied by General Dumas and the Duke de Saxe, arrived in Rio on the 2d of September, and was received by M. Lisboa (the Brazilian Minister to the Emperor's court) and by the Emperor's daughter, the Princess Clemantine d'Orléans, daughter of Louis Philippe. He is, therefore, cousin to the Count d'Eu. His uncle is the father of the King of Portugal. The young duke, who is the son of the second Prince of Brazil, was married at the Chateau d'Eu, August 9, 1863. He early entered the Austrian marine, and served in the Danubian war.

It is curious to see how the House of Brazil is allied by blood and by marriage to the various imperial and royal houses of Europe. The father of Don Pedro II was a Braganza, his mother an Austrian Archduchess, sister to the second Empress of the French. Don Pedro II was thus the second Prince of Brazil, and by marriage to Napoleon III, his stepmother (the Empress Amelia, now in Portugal, the second wife of Don Pedro I) is the daughter of Eugene Beauharnais, and thus by marriage alliance the present Emperor of Brazil is related to Napoleon III and to the present reigning families of Sweden and of Russia. His sister, the late Donna Maria II of Portugal, was married to Ferdinand, Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, cousin to the Queen of England.
