State of the Commonwealth-Message of the Hon. A. G. Curtin.

THE health of his Excellency Governor CURTIN has been so far benefited by his visit to Hayana, as to fit him for the resumption of his fluties as Executive of the Commonwealth. His message, which we publish elsewhere, and which was read to the two branches of the Legislature to-day, is the first evidence of his recuperated strength. We must congratulate the Governor, but more especially the people of Pennsylvania, on the recovery of the man who has held with a firm and nerveless arm the helm of the Commonwealth while all the land was being inundated by the waves of civil war.

The need of such a sentinel to watch their interests, such a guardian to protect them from danger, and such a politician as to be able to win by policy where justice could not be secured, has been felt for four years by our sister States. Happy was the Keystone of the Federal Arch in having such a citizen as her Executive. The Governor's health is, we understand, almost entirely restored by his visit to a warmer climate, and having, by his Message, officially recommenced his gubernatorial life, he will perform the duties of the position with that fidelity and ability which have ever marked his record in the past.

The Message reveals a condition of affairs in our State most satisfactory. The finances, notwithstanding the bitter philippics uttered against us by the New York journals, are not in a condition to merit alarm. In tact, the report developes a fluancial phenomenon. The condition of the treasury is improved since 1861, or, in other words, the war which has been suppressed, which has desolated our land and also added millions to our indebtedness, has, in reality, had no deleterious influence on the State in a monetary point of view; but the self-sustaining energy of our Commonwealth has actually increased, the amount of debt over the assets in the treasury from $26,403,163 to $23,852,589, or an improvement of $2,555,579. This is a pleasing phenomenon, which merits the congratulation of our citizens, and affords the best argument in favor of the continued confidence which the people have always reposed in the Government.

The Governor reviews the course of the State, and gives a short history of her conduct during the war. The sketch is of interest, and affords a cause of just pride, that the citizens of the Commonmealth, through all the night of Rebellion, never faltared in the cause of our nationality. It is of import-field in which the hungry are to be ted, the naked clothed, and the general work of industrial and commercial restoration must be prosecuted. It must require several months-it may require several years-to bring the South back to that measure of prosperity which it enjoyed before the Rebellion; and its people, for a while, at least, will have to look abroad for very much of the labor, the capital, and the material that will be wanted to start them in the hard struggle to retrieve their ruined fortunes and set them squarely on their feet again. The clear policy of the people of the North is to help the Southern people to rebuild and equip their dilapidated roads, bring their farms and plantations again under cultivation, revive their productive energies in all the useful arts of peace, and re establish their trade. True patriotism and sound national economy urge this course upon us. Every part of a country benefits in the prosperity of the whole, and the aggregate result of the harmonious co-operation of its people in producing and consuming, buying and selling, and reciprocally supplying each other's wants by the exchanges of commerce, is the largest possible general wealth, prosperity, and happiness.

Moreover, the Southern States are too fruitful in various natural products, not obtainable in equal abundance and with equal facility and cheapness from any other scource, to be suffered to lie idle and unimproved. The North needs their cotton, sugar, rice, tobacco, tar, rosin, turpentine, lumber, and numerous other like staples and commodities, and it is deeply interested in the resurrection of an industry and a trade which will secure us those important articles in exchange for our manufactures, and so forth.

It is undoubtedly true that a people, as a general rule, will send their goods where they get the best price for them, and purchase their supplies where they can get them cheapest, But trade, nevertheless, must take the channels that are open to it, and seek the markets that are, by such means, most accessible to it-Hence, those Northern cities which most promptly and most liberally facilitate communication with the Southern country, especially by sea, will reap, of necessity, the largest share of the Southern trade. There can be no question about that fact. The proposition is self-evident, and it is already finding its verification in the heavy business which New York and Baltimore are now carrying on through their steamship connections with Southern ports. There is, indeed, here and there, an individual so blind and stupid as to contend that the facilities of commerce should not be supplied until they are needed, or, in other words, that a railway or a line of steamers connecting one place with other places ought not to be provided until there is trade enough waiting for them in advance to demand their use and to fully sustain them at once. It would be just as wise for a farmer to say that the ground for the growth of his next year's crop of grain should not be prepared until the crop is matured. Such folly as this is hardly worthy of notice. The fact is, that the e is now much

THE CHESNUT STRFET BRIDGE .- Some enterprising individuals, laboring under a desire merely to establish a point of law relative to the bridging of a stream, have seen fit to bring before the Supreme Court of the United States a suit against the erection of the Chesnut Street Bridge. The wish to settle a legal technicality is a laudable one, and the complainants deserve credit for the effort; for it is impossible for us to impute to them any other motive than a professional curiosity. No one could be so blind to the signs of the times, especially to the signs of the Chesnut Street Bridge, to anticipate that it would be concluded in the lifetime of any man now living. For all practical purposes it is the same as it restrained by an injunction ; what is denied by law is granted by the energetic contractor, and he can therefore view the soit and its decision as merely matters of legal interest.

Yesterday the opinion of the Court was read by Justice WAYNE. It amounted to a declaration that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction in the premises, and that the case comes legitimately under the control of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. The injunction prayed for, therefore, was refused, and the case decided in favor of the continuance of the bridge. It is probable that the reason why the work has progressed so slowly was for the tear that the whole proceeding would be declared illegal. We are willing to take it for granted that such is the excuse. There is now, however, no impediment to prevent its completion with the present century. We would make a suggestion that the efforts of the workmen be so stimulated, that should the progress of the construction not be unseemingly interrupted, that when we celebrate the termination of the fourth centennial anniversary of the settlement of Pennsylvania, in 1887, the bridge could be christened at the same time. We would not hasten the work so as to injure the construction, but if not incompatible with durability, that the termination be secured by the date we suggest.

IN COUNCILS, last Thursday, a communication was received from HENRY BICKLEY. offering to clean the streets of Philadelphia, remove the ashes and garbage, and to clean the inlets, for the sum of ninety-five thousand dollars per annum. A resolution to award the contract to Mr. BICKLEY was referred to the joint special committee on the subject. Should the offer be accepted, it would be a saving to the city of nearly a hundred thousand dollars. Although we do not know that the contract can be well executed under such an appropriation, we can say that the streets cannot be in a worse condition than they are under the present regime. Any change must be for the better, and if a sum as large as that saved by giving to HENRY BICKLEY the contract can be acquired, then let it be given by all means. Where all is to be gained and nothing lost, there need be no hesitation.

THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

The Day of Sacred Rest - Its Moral Obligations.

To the Editor of the Evening Telegraph :-The Bible is our book of moral philosophy. Above and beyond it there is no authority. What taen

Here we may as well meet an objection. It may be-it has been said, if the Sabhath was a binding moral law from the beginning of mankind, as Luther and Calvin tell us, it is strange that we flud scarcely any notice of its observancy for so many hundred years. Surely, if it had been a moral law binding upon all mankind, more irequent notices of it must have occurred during the twenty-five cen turies from Adam to Moses. This is plausible, but not solid. For, first, as just noted, the history is very brief; and we have seen two notable instances of Sabhaile observance. Secondly, The patriarchs Noah, Abraham Isaac, and Jacob were in the habit of creeting their altars and of calling upon the name of the Lord. See Geneus viil. 20, xil. 7, xxii, 9, xxxv, 1-3. Now calling on the name of the Lord is a description of public worship; and public worship implies publication of the time and place-it involves conventional argument; and the presumption is strong that these days of public worship were the same as observed from the beginning-the hallowed Sabbath day. But my third and chief refutation of this objection hes in the fact that it is a negation. There is no record du y authoritative that Moses' wife was a black woman; therefore she was not black, she was only "an E hiopian woman." There is no record that Abram forded the Euphrates; therefore he did not ford that river. There is no ovidence that he ferried over it; therefore he did not cross it at all. Let us apply this reasoning in another case. From the days of Cam (Gen. 1v, 17) to the flood, there is but one mention made of wines (Gen. iv, 19); therefore men had no wines for sixteen centuries. From the sacrifices of Abel and Cain to Nosh, no sacrifices are mentioned in the records, and so from Noah to Abraham; therefore the divise instruction of sacrifice was utterly neglected for sixteen conturies, and again for four conturies. Again, "No special instance of the practice of circomeision is recorded as having occurred from the settlement of the Hebrews in Canaan to the time of Christ" (Princeton Rev., October, 1859.) Therefore for nearly fifteen centuries the sacred symbol and seal of Abraham's covenant was lost and ignored! On the contrary, the brief notices above of the law of sacred rest are just such as the brief history would reasonably be expected to give.

As the perpeirator of the felony is supposed to have remained in the city, the names and details or the case have been suppressed by those most interested in the amir, the firm believing that a complete expose of the facts would rather injure their business reputation, and the bank officers not desiring to make public a statement that night prevent the capture of the forger and the recovery of his booty. At an early hour yesterday afternoon it was rumored on the street and on 'Change that a torgery had been committed, by which the Chatham National Bank, a financial institution located at the corner of John street and Broadway, had been the losers of nearly one hundred thousand dollars. Inquiries were at once made at the bank, when the officers furnished the reporter with some of the following facts:-

It is charged that a few months since an individual, whose real name is unknown, established an office down town, assued cards that stated the owner to be in the commission business, and made daily efforts to become acquainted with the most prominent business men of the city. Trade with the South.

THOSE of our business men who have recently been taking upon themselves the task of raising the necessary capital to establish steamship communication between this city and several Southern ports, and those, also, who have liberally subscribed to the required fund, certainly deserve the cordial thanks of this community. It is by no means an agreeable labor to collect subscriptions for a private or public enterprise of any kind, nor has it ever been here a light and easy labor to discharge. Our people are not as wide awake to their industrial and commercial interests as are those of New York and Boston, or, at this time, even Baltimore; and it needs a great deal of stirring up of the dry bones among us to push a steamship project, especially, to a successful result. But there are, just now, peculiarly powerful motives and inducements to stimulate our manufacturers and merchants to unprecedented efforts to build up our maritime trade, and particularly that with the cities on our Southern seaboard.

The present value and prospective growth of that trade cannot be overestimated. The South has not only a great deal to buy from the North, but a great deal to sell to the North in return. And this section is likely to be very largely profited in both ways. That extensive district of country which was the seat and theatre of the late Rebellion found itself, at the close of the war, in an exceedingly enfeebled and exhausted condition. Its industry was suspended, its commerce luterrupted, its railways and other internal improvements seriously damaged and kept out of repair, while its entire people were reduced to extreme destitution of all the luxuries, and even very many of the necessaries, of life. There is, therefore, in that quarter of the Union a vast moment.

American shipping to accommodate it; and that Pennsylvania has done. The number of those cities at this end of the Union which first and most freely meet this necessity of the Southern people for getting the merchandise they want, and sending to a market the products they have to export, will find their reward in the result.

more trade needing shipment than there is

In connection with this subject it is said, and with considerable truth, that those who would cultivate commercial intercourse with their neighbors, should not unnecessarily offend their pride or provoke their enmity. Whatever severity of censure the Southern Rebels mericed during the war, and will always deserve from their honest friends, its expression, now that the Rebellion is conquered, and the Government is trying to reconstruct the Union, may properly be pretermitted altogether, or at least relieved from all that coarseness of language and acrimony of invective which can do no possible good henceforth, and must certainly seriously injure those who indulge in it. The Southern people made a fearful mistake in their insurrection. They are sensible of it now, and have been and are yet being terribly punnished for their folly. There is no true magnanimity in forever twitting them with their crime and its consequences. It is far more manly and politic to help the fallen to rise by every just and generous aid we can render them; while every good citizen must desire, by kindness and conciliation towards the Southern people, to speedily and entirely restore the unity of the nation.

THE RETURN OF SECRETARY SEWARD .--The people will be glad to learn that our Secretary of State has returned from his trip to the tropics in search of reinvigoration and health. The experience through which this venerable statesman has passed during the past twelve month was sufficient to break down the most robust constitution. His labors have been great, but badinage to the horrors through which he has passed. We can scarcely conceive of any life that has been more sorrowful than that of Secretary SEW-ARD. Crowned with every honor that a grateful people could confer upon him, he was yet visited by the sharpest afflictions of Providence. Broken health, loss of dear ones and intimate friends-narrowly escaping from the effects of the assassin's knife-complicated in the grandest and bloodiest tragedy of modern times, it is not wonderful that he needed rest and recreation for a brief period. But instantly on his return he has buckled on the harness, and is now engaged in the great public duties which call for his immediate attention. We sincerely hope that his valuable life will long be spared. as we could illy afford to lose him at this does it say as to the Sabbath?

1. The first proof of its permanent moral obligation is the fact that it is the first law God ever enacted "for man." "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that on it he had rested from all his work which God created and made."-Genesis it, 3. What can be meant by this bleasing the day ? Can time be made happy? What, by hallowing or making it holy? Can time be clothed with moral purity? Clearly, both the blessing and the sanctifying have reference to man, for whom our Saviour says the day was made. This appointment of a day of rest for man, immediately after creation, proves that it was not an institution necuhar to the Jewish nation, for Abraham, their oot-progenitor, was not bora until 2076 years atterwards; and because it is expressly said, elsewhere, "The Sabbath was made for man"-for mankind; and because here, the reason of its appointment was wod's ceasing from the work of creating, in which the whole race are equally interested. It was establahed as a means of holiness and happiness to mankind. This proves it to be a moral law binding and blessing all the human race

2. The second proof we find in the history in Genesis iv. Here we have a brief account of public worship. "At the end of days"-at the cutting off ol days. Here is reference to the division of days into sections. The number of days included in these sections is not here named. But as afterwards we know the sections were of seven days, as will be proved shouly, we have a right to conclude it was so here. The history of his creation most assuredly was made known to Adam. It is not conceivable that God would give him no account of the creations of the six days and the resting of the seventh. To allege, because no written account was given to Adam, therefore he was ignorant of all this, is simply childish; for no man can prove that there was any written alphabetic language prior to Moses. And why should Moses be informed of the history of creation and Adam himself left ignorant or it? No man can believe it. Besides, the brevity of the history admits not of detail in this worship of Adam's family-the whole race These first seven chapters cover the history of 1656 years. This public worship, in process of time-at the end of daysimitating the Creator's example of six day,' labor and one of rest, is mentioned as a thing of course, and proves the observance of a day of sacred resting from labor and of holy consecration.

3. The cutting off of days into sections of seven days is twice mentioned in Genesis viii, 10, 12. This proves that Noah observed the division of time, the ame as we do now. The same can be interred from the seven days noted in chapter vii. 4. 10, "Yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain." "And atter seven days the waters of the flood were upon the earth." Undoubtedly the hebdomadal division of time was then currently in use

The application of this number to the clean beasts. v, 2, also showsfa mystical use most easily explained by its reference to the days of creation and of rest as its origin. Seven is the number of perfection. The seventh year was consecrated and "seven Sab. baths shall be complete," and previously, the Egyp tian visions presented "seven well-invored kine." and ill-tavored the same in number; and so seven good and seven had ears on a stock. So seven days and seven priests, bearing seven trumpets, etc., plainly showing the number seven to be peculiarly distinguisced in the Scriptures; and this boing first presented in reference to the days of sacred rest, mounts to more than a violent presumption-it constitutes a proof of the seven h day's consecration as a Subbath from the beginning.

lar check on the Chatham National Bank, signed by his own name, and in appearance duly certified by the telles of the institution.

The check was accepted and ten thousand dollars in gold paid to the man, who at once dis-appeared with the funds. On presentation of check to the bank, it was ascertained beyond a doubt that the ingenious rogue had obtained y some means or other an impression of the teller's stamp of certification, wherewith he had caused to be manufactured a duplicate stamp, thus being enabled to counterfeit the teller certification signature on as many checks as he chose to issue.

The torger, it would appear, escaped at once with his booty, and has been entirely lost sight of. It is presumed that the "working up" of the case has been entrusted to the police, at least, to private detectives, and all steps will be taken to secure the arrest of the guilty party and the recovery of the money. Meantime, the names of the victims of the forgery have been withheld from the public, prudence demanding the adop-tion of such a measure.—New York Herald.
