The Chesnut Street Bridge.

THE Chesnut Street Bridge is likely to live in our local history as a monument of slow work. We do not believe it took the Egyp tians as long to build one of their pyramids, as it has taken the contractors for the above named structure to get it to its present halfcompleted stage. The thing has been so long in course of erection, that we seriously doubt whether many of our citizens can remember when it was begun; and hence it is possible that the origin of the Chesnut Street Bridge may, before it is finished, attain to the venerable antiquity of those prescriptive laws of Old England, whose whole authority lies in the fact that they have endured so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. On one of the granite stones of the centre pier of the bridge, some artist has engraven the figures 1865; but if that inscription was intended to express the date when the edifice was commenced, it will, most certainly, publish a gross falsehood in chro-

The public, however, is much more concerned to know when the bridge will be completed than when it was begun. That has, for some time past, been an uppermost question in the popular mind, to which, unfortunately, no one has yet been able to give a positive answer. Various predictions upon the subject, made by the contractors and others within the last four or five years, have been unrealized; and the consequence is that nobody now seems to be willing to take the responsibility of saying when the bridge will become an accomplished fact, or whether it will ever, within the lifetime of this and the next generation, at least, be consummated. The old proverb, so frequently used to rebuke those who expect great undertakings to be carried through with impossible expedition, to wit, "Rome was not built in a day," is likely to be superseded, in this city at least, by this saying :- The Chesnut Street Bridge was not built in five years!

There is nothing like having old apothegms, which have lost their force by age, replaced by new ones, which come home more immediately and familiarly to the common understanding of the people. They "point a moral" much more effectively, and delight the mind with so lively a sense of their meaning and pertinency, that we almost laugh at an affliction by reason of the ridiculousness of the illustration. And this is really the state of mind with which the people are now regarding the Chesnut Street Bridge. The thing is scarcely ever named in public without exciting a general ba! ha! all round, and provoking the tacetiousness of every wag in the

But in good earnest, the bridge is no laughing matter. It is greatly needed as an avenue of communication between the east and west ends of the city, and ought, by all means, to be opened to travel before the present century runs out. And it is quite probable, if the work is only pressed forward benceforth with the same vigor and promptness with which it has been pushed hitherto, that we shall be permitted to cross the Schuylkill, at Chesnut street, without the aid of a boat, before the year 1900! The spectator will observe, any day, the enormous number of laborers employed in the building of the structure, and be struck, no doubt, with the marvellons energy with which they are straining every muscle and nerve to finish the "job." But he cannot, nevertheless, expect human thews and stnews to work impossibilities. He must make allowance for stress of weather; for the difficulty of getting competent workmen; for the enormous rise since the Rebellion in the wages of labor; for the unappreciable time it requires to cast and raise to their places huge masses of iron arches, and columns, and braces: and, finally, the fearful perplexity to which the contractors for such works are subjected, in having so much other work on hand that they cannot possibly get through with their engagements to the public without sacrificing their private custom. These, and ether like considerations, should always be borne in memory by those absurdly impatient "old fogies" who foolishly imagine that it is as easy to build a bridge over the Schuylkill as it is to build a monument to the "Father of his Country." Is it not notorious, that the corner-stone of a structure in honor of the sage and patriot of Mount Vernon was laid in the Washington Square more than a quarter of a century ago, and that it is not yet finished? Is it not quite as to quiet the public this law is passed, with character and purpose, was begun at the Federal Capital many years since, and is still standing, in ragged incompleteness, right under the shadow of the very walls within which the Congress of the Republic daily assembles? Why, then, should it be supposed for a moment that a bridge across one of our intramural rivers should be built in a briefer period than the whole people of the United States can erect one complete monument to Washington? The idea is simply preposterous.

It is not, of course, our purpose to blame any one particularly, for the unreasonable rapidity with which the work on the Chesnut Street Bridge has been pushed ahead. Where so many are concerned in the rash impetuosity with which the "job" is being shoved to completion, it would be unfair, as it certainly is impossible, to say who is in fault. The City Surveyor and the City Councils have repeatedly tried to solve the mystery, without success; and it surely would be presumptuous were we to attempt to unravel the enigmas which have proved too hard for their acute inquisition. The subject, however, is worthy of close investigation; and we may yet discover for the public benefit why it is that those engaged in building the bridge are hurrying the work so precipitately to a conclusion.

How it Will Operate.

AFTER a delay which, if it had been employed in perfecting an ordinance, should have insured a model law, the Councils of our city yesterday adopted a plan for the cleansing of the streets, which, if it be not efficacious, is at least complex. In a previous article we opposed the particular form in which the scheme was drawn up, because of the power which it gave into the hands of one man. Upon closer inspection there will appear other evils, so radical in their nature that they will ing all probability nullify the end intended by the designer of the bill. Let us look at its provisions.

1. It gives to the Mayor the absolute dis posal of the contract, without any restraint or provision. He can award the job to any of his friends if he is so inclined. He can give it to any other than the lowest bidder. He need not publish for proposals. There is no guarantee against partiallity, favoritism, or fraud. We have confidence in Mayor Mc-MICHAEL, but were it the angel GABRIEL, we would be oppose I togiving into his hands such absolute power. The most virtuous public officer should have some check on his movements, and in the provisions of the bill we find none whatever, except the limitation that the sum paid annually shall not exceed $95,000.

2. It provides for the continuance of the contract in the same hands for the term of five years, yet at the same time gives the appointment to an official whose term of office will expire in less than three years from the date of the award. In other words, it saddles upon another administration, which will be Mr. McMichael's successor, an incumbent of his appointment, and one into whose hands the immense sum of nearly $100,000 must annually be paid. In none of the systems of public patronage, either in our National or State politics, does the term of office of the appointee extend beyond that of the superior who gave him his position. But here in our municipal affairs is a precedent established of placing in office a man who will hold his position and receive its perogatives under a new regime, which had nothing to do with the selection, and with the success or feelings of which he is in no wise identified.

3. It gives to the Mayor the singular power of "absolutely annulling the contract or contracts" whenever, in his opiuion, upon hisjown information or that of the Chief Inspector or Joint Committee, there has been any failure on the part of the contractors to perform all the requirements." That is to say, should the present Mayor, or his successor, (and we know not whether we will be again tavored with so honest and upright an officer,) after having given out the job, find another applicant who is more consonant with his personal wishes all that is necessary, in order to get rid of the incumbent, is to find a back alley which is not cleansed, and send him a written notice announcing the annulling of his contract and the forfeithre of his "two good securities." We opine that the fortunate receiver of the award will have some slight difficulty in securing "two good securities" who will be willing to place their bonds in such a precarious depository as that provided by the ordinance. The action of one man can forfeit them, and that one man may be pecuniarily interested in favor of such a course. We imagine the worst, for, sad as it may be, we are compelled to acknowledge that the example of the metropolis shows that such things can be, and that even mayors are not necessarily incorruptible. 4. While the comparatively meagre sum of $95,000 is all that is allowed to the contractor, yet of even this he is not sure. In fact, while he bargains for $95,000 he will only have at his disposal the sum of $87,000 per annum, as the second section provides for the retention of one-twelith of the sum for the purpose of going over the ground cleaned by the contractor, and seeing that it is well swept and garnished. In fact, the whole wording of the ordinance seems designed to place the aspirant for the award in such a position that he will be unjustly imposed upon, and, if possible, placed in such a position that he will be compelled to decline the contract. We should think from the provisions of the law that it was intended to operate like DRACO's code, and fall dead because of its stringency. We should imagine that it was not the wish of the desinger of the measure that any contract should be entered into, but that in order well known that a national edifice, of the same | the understanding that it will be of no practical effect.

Whatever may have been the intention, the workings fof the ordinance will be anything but [what is desired or anticipated. And in view of the fact that it is likely to remain a dead letter, we are pleased to see that the Board of Health have determined to take active steps should Councils fail to do so. It map be that the resolutions sent to our City Fathers were abrupt, were too sharp to ba exactly proper, but the subject-matter contained in them will please the people. Medical men are with us, like they are among the Choctaws and Camanches, exempted from the conventional rules of parliamentary etiquette. They see that life and death hang in the balance, and, with an impatience which is almost excusable, they call for action to decide the trempling scale in favor of life. They see that with the re urn of warm weather will probably come the cholera, and they desire to make every preparation for its reception; they desire to set their houses in order, so that they may be prepared for the worst; and if, in their anxiety, they exhibit an undue excitement, let us impute it to their wish to save life, and not to any factious desire to be insolent. Under any circumstances, we anticipate that the lethargy which has continued for months in the department of cleansing is to be broken up, and action, vigorous action, either under the ordinance or by the Board of Health, take the place of idle and dangerous indifference.

The Cpinion of the Hon. Joseph E. Brown, of Georgia.

A NUMBER of the members of the Legislature of Georgia have written a letter to ex-Governor JOSEPH E. BROWN, of that State, requesting his views "as to the legislation which is proper, under existing circumstances, relative to the freedmen." To this appeal Mr. Brown has written a sensible and powerful reply, which will compare most favorably with any of his previous productions. During the war the Governor of Georgia acquired a reputation which was rather anomalous in its character. The extreme eccentricity of his public acts, combined with the doubt which enveloped his political sentiments, made him rather the object of wonder than admiration. He kept himself continually before the popular eye, for the curious were speculating as to what would be his new vagary. The conquest of treason has acted like a charm to dispel the clouds of doubt which has obscured his brain; and as the insane are frequently restored to reason by being led to the top of a high mountain, and taking in at one glance so wide and grand an expanse of country, so has Mr. BROWN been made sensible by one long look from the height of freedom.

The gist of his whole letter is contained in the concluding paragraph:-

"I think it unwise and mudicious for the Legislature to pass any Freedman's Code, or any other law that discriminates between the races, so far as rights and remedies in our Courts are concerned. A short statute extending the provisions of the penal code of this State so as to embrace all persons of African descent, and extending to them all the civil rights in our Courts enjoyed by white persons, except the right to sit in the jury box, together with the same rights of marriage as between persons of their own color, and the same rights of inheritance, with the same laws of guardianship, apprenticeship, etc., is all the legislation relative to them which is expedient or proper."

Here there is good common sense. He does not like the combination of events which has placed the black man on a legal equality with the white; yet, when such an event is irremediable, he bows to it as a necessity, and recommends that they act as sound thinking men, and not as hot-blooded boys. Let the proper protection be given to the blacks; let the suggestion of Mr. Brown be acted upon, and to the State of Georgia will be awarded the praise due to reason, and the prosperity which ever follows in the path of wise legis-

The Chicago Republican says of the winter season in the Northwest that it has been favorable to all interests. The protracted autumn weather gave an excellent opportunity for the completion of out-door work on the farm and in building operations. Once begun, the winter has been very stuadily maintained as a close seasen, according to the register of the ther-mometor, while there has not been a sufficient weight of snow to constitute a blockade for more than brief periods upon our ra'lroads, and none at all upon other winter occupations. Throughout the country the farmers have had umimpeded access to the timber land and swamps, and from all quarters we learn that unusually large quantities of logs have been got out. In the lumber regions proper there has been snow enough to favor, and not enough to impede, the logging gangs. There has been a longer than the usual period of sleghing in the North-west and far more than the customary amount yielded by a like quantity of snow.
