MILLED AT THE FORD.

ET W. H. LONGFELLOW.

He is dead, the beautiful youth, The heart of honor, the tongue of truth, He, the lite and light of us all, Whose votce was blithe as a bugle call, Whom all eves followed with one consent. The cheer of whose laugh, and whose pleasant word, Hushed all murmurs of discontent.

Only last night, as we rode along Down the dark of the mountain gap To visit the picket-guard at the lord, Lattle dreaming of any mishap, He was humming the words of some old song :-"Two red roses he had on his cap, And another he bore at the point of his sword."

Sudden and swift a whistling ball Came out of a wood, and the voice was still; Something I heard in the darkness fall, And for a moment my blood grew chill; I spake in a whisper, as he who speaks In a room where some one is lying dead; But he made no answer to what I said.

We lifted him up on his saddle again, And through the mire and the mist and the rain Carried him back to the silent camp, And laid him as if asleep on his bed And I saw in the light of the surgeon's lamp Two white roses upon his cheeks, And one just over his heart, blood-red !

And I saw in a vision how far and fleet That fatal bullet went speeding forth Till it reached a town in the distant North Till it reached a house in a sunny street, fill it reached a heart that ceased to beat, Without a murmur, without a cry: And a bell was tolled in that far-off town, For one who had passed from cross to crown-And the neighbors wondered that she should die

FRANCE.

Jules Favre and the Emperor-Spicy Exposure of Imperial Shams-Immorality of the French Stage and Court, Etc. Etc.

PARIS, March 16. - After a week of comparatively uninteresting debate in the Corps Legislatif, Jules Favre, the leader of the oppo-sition, electrified that body yesterday with an address which would have made the Emperor's ears tingle if he had heard it, and which must have "got his mad up" a little when he read it this morning. The text was the paragraph in the address congratulating the Emperor upon the stability of the interior regime and institutions of France.

The Emperor, at the close of his last address, at the opening of the Corps Legislatif, put an effectual stopper upon the hopes of the liberal party that there was to be any further exten-sion of liberty in France. "There had been enough talk about this," the Emperor said, in substance, and "the great desideratum now was to increase the physical prosperity of the country and improve public morals." Into these propositions of the Emperor Jules Favre pitched right and left, yesterday, charged his Majesty with having utterly failed to falfil his pro-mises, called the empire a "negative and a parody" of the system of 1789, of which it pro lessed to be a continuation, demanded the liberty of the press, the right of rennion, and that electoral liberty now effectually crushed out by the system of Governmental candidates. He closed his speech with the following remarkable paragraphs, which must be gail and worm-wood to the "powers that be":--"In regard to the exterior policy, if the country had been master of its destinies, we should never have witnessed these distant expeditions which have so greatly compromised our interests. We should not have sent to die on the other side of the Atlantic so many young men whose arms would have enriched our soil. We should not have seen millions wasted in Mexico in behalf of an enterprise the least fault of which is that it is impossible. These millions would have been usefully employed in benefiting France and her colonies.

"As to the interior regime, we are sometimes told that the passions are completely appeased. Sometimes that they are still fermenting, that parties are always armed, and that our libertie magnificent turnouts on the avenues and in the gois de Boulogne, bedecked and belewelied, oc-cupying the best and most prominent places in the theatree, setting the fashlons which duch-esses and princesses greedly follow-those who have witnessed all this will not wonder that men like Jules Favre demand something better for France. He and his partisans charge it or printer. He and the empire that they en-courage, or, at least do not desire to suppress this state of things, because it drowns thought in amusement, riot, and debauchery, and, there-fore, acts as a preventive to revolution. repr John Mitchel has turned up in the newspapers, He has written a communication to the Opinio

Nationale, in which he replies to an article ir Nationale, in which he replies to an article P intenumber of the Revue des Deux Mond , in which it is stated that "Ireland enjoys" all the liberties that England does." Mitche*, proves very conclusively that this is far ", com being true. He has moved over the rive" into a house near the Jardin des Fiantes, in " nich there are a number of Irish refugees," He keeps himself very quict, all house hand to be in constant com-munication with the chi/to the the constant communication with the chifds of the Fenian movement in ireland. I understand that Mitchel's preditections are favorable to the O'Mahony party in America. This is the Prince Imperial's birthday, he having completed his tenth and entered upon his eleventh year. For the past three years on this occasion there has been a review of a company of boy soldiers-enfans de broupe, of which the Prince is a member, and afterwards a dinner at which he presided. Having just recovered from the measles, however, he probably does not feel sufficiently strong for such proceedings at present. Last evening and to-day the theatres and public buildings were hung with flags, and the Emperor, as usual on such occasions, has exhibited his joy by selecting about two hundred superannuated mayors of communes, and decorating them with the ribbon of the Legion of Honor. As to the Prince humself, for a young man he has certainly done very well. He is a corporal in the Grenadiers of the Guard and Honorary President of the Committee of the Grand Exhibition, speaks seven different lan guagee, all about equally well; is "well up" in French and foreign history, and is said to be an exceedingly kind, amiable, and intelligent boy. Gustave Dore, it seems, is not to illustrate Shakespeare, after all. A publisher offered him four hundred thousand francs, but he demanded the round sum of a million. It is, perhaps, not unfortunate that the proposition fell through, as with all his genius it would have been utterly impossible for him to have done the work in a manner which would have fulfilled all the exigencies of art. He does not read a word of English, and would have been, therefore, obliged to depend upon a French translation; besides which, it seems utterly impossible that any Frenchman can properly understand Shake-speare. For the fables of La Fontaine, upon the illustrations of which he is now employed, he receives five hundred france for each one, and it is said that after making his studies he draws two a day, for which he receives cash on de-He may be seen almost every day now livery. at the Jardin des Plantes, studying the move ments and peculiarities of the animals which will occupy places in this great work. #### The Dangers of Eating.

A WESTERN MERCHANT CHOKED TO DEATH IN TAY-LOR'S SALOON.

Thaddeus Scott a country merchant, was choked to death this afternoon, at Taylor's saloon, at the corner of Broadway and Franklin street. He was from Napierville to Illinois, and came here to buy goods. It is understood he arrived to-day. Mr. Scott entered the saloon at about 2 o'clock with Mr. Matthews, of the firm of Mattnews & Taylor, and calling, it is reported, for beefsteaks, the two began their meal. Scott ate rapidly, and soon he began to choke. The alarm spread, and as Scott grew black in the face a crowd gathered, and the excitement soon became intense.

A surgeon of the New York Hospital was sent for; but the persons by the saloon fearing that Scott would die ook him, some by the legs and others by how so ok him, some by the legs and F

-c was apparently in convulsions when he arrived there. An incision was at once made in his throat, and the meat was removed; but there were only three respirations, and he died.

should still be refused us. Public movies spoken of. If you would have go in morals you have institutions which can form them. France have institutions we en can form them. France is saturated with milliary glory. She has need of moral dignity and grandeur. If you will interrogate the literature of the present day, which is the expression of public morals, you will be driven to some unfortunate conclusions. "You have decreed the liberty of theatres, and with the censorship you do what you please upon the public scene, and what do you show us there? Great God! you force a man with any sense of decency to keep away from this privileged temple in launching at him this sort of insult. 'I desired to speak of virtue and devotion. These are no longer actuali-ties, and I am driven from the temple consecrated to them."

"What do you make of the French scene? Yon have made it a scene of libertinage and shamelessness; you expose upon it disgusting nudities. You have in your hands a law made to prevent children from working in manufac-torics, and you begrime the child upon the scene of a privileged theatre in making him represent the type and model of degradation and cynicism, to the scandal of all respectable people. And then you open bais masques, and you say :-- 'Come and amuse yourselves, and drink from the cup which I put to your lips.' As for me, I say to you, France wants some-thing else. She wishes to have the power of exercising her liberties. We are nothing if we cannot raise our eyes towards Heaven, and we carnot do that if we are not free."

There is an immense deal of truth in the trenchant remarks of this salient, sturdy leader of the opposition in the French Corps Legislatif. He and thousands of thinking men in France mourn over a state of things in this capital which approaches very nearly to that which existed in Rome just before its downfall, and which explorations and excavations prove to have been the moral condition of Herculaneum and Pompeli at the time they were overwhelmed and buried. The poisonous literature which is permitted to be spread through France, and which is represented by such types as "Fanny" and "Daniel" of Feydeau; "Salambo" and "Madam Boyary" of Flaubert-the well-known and immensely popular works of Paul de Kock and his son and successor, and the inheritor of his meretricious qualities and fame, Henri, is sapping the foundation of morals of the present and rising generation of France, and it is to this class of works that M. Favre alludes.

Any one who has seen the show pieces of the liche auz Bois and the Lanterne Magique, Biche aux Bois and the Landerne Magique, in each of which the 'well-formed and beautiful young ladies' advertised for seemed literally determined to 'outstrip' all others, and who has observed the astonishingly small quantity of dress and the astonishingly large quantity of body which is permitted to be exhibited upon the boards of the Paris theatres, will well un-derstand what he means by his reference to them. The 'infant' he speaks of is 'Fanfan Benoiton,' in Sardou's piece of the Famille Be-notion, which has been running now at the noticn, which has been running now at the Vaudeville nearly a hundred and fifty nights. This type of the sunny childhood of Paris is a youngster of eight years, who seems to have thoroughly studied Machiavelli, and has no faith in his race; who is blase; who rambles and makes "corners" in the style of an old stock broker, at the "bourse" which the children used to hold in the garden of the Tullcries for the exchange and sale of postage stamps, and who finally attempts to rob his father's safe to make up for his losses.

who has witnessed the scene of riot and debauchery on the Sunday mornings of the bals masques at the opera will not wonder at his referring to them in this connection. Indeed, all who have observed in Paris the constantly and rapidly apparent fading out of decency and public and private moralty, who sees the shop windows on the most public thoroughfares filled with photographs and pictures which no decent woman or man even can look at without shame; who see the "fast women" of the demi monde flaunting in silks and laces, driving their

His age was about thirty-five years. An in-quest will be held. In the meantime his friends have been telegraphed for, and some of them are expected to arrive here. His connections are said to be highly respectable.-N. Y. Evening Post, 30th ult.

A Grand Tour of Knights Templar.

The Boston Encampment of Knights Templar, Wyseman Marshall, Eminent Commander, will leave Boston about the 1st of June on an extensive excursion through the country. They will first visit Washington, where they will receive the courtesies of the encampment of that city, and afterwards will proceed to Chicago via the Baltimore and Chio Railroad, taking Cincinnati in their route. On their return they will come by the Michigan Southern line to Detroit, visit Rochester and Oswego, cross into Canada, passing a day at Toronto, thence along the Grand Trunk to Montreal and Portland home. The tour is a magnificent one and it will not fail to realize to every Knight who participates in it a fund of gratification and instruction.

A Tree Worth $25,000.

A remarkable tree was brought to New York in the month of January, 1866, from a Western State. It was a black walnut, seventy feet long, measuring 4500 feet board measure; but when cut into veneers, it would be thirty times that, making 135,000 feet, which at twenty cents would be worth $27,000. The cost of cutting it and placing it in store for sale would be about $700. Black walnut, for the last six years, has been gradually taking the lead of mahogany, and is worth as much now as mahogany was formerly. The figure most sought for at present is a stripe, which seems to be formed by the sap, casting dark and light shades alternately through the tree, which when worked, makes the most beautiful furniture that is manufactured.

A HOOSIEE ROBS HIMSELF AND IS DETECTED,-This morning a man named J. B. Jardella, hailing from Madison, Ind., made his appearance at the police headquarters, stating that be had been robbed of $4500, in proof of which fact he ex-hibited a deep incision in his pantaloons, where he said the pocket had been cut out, and in further evidence he shed tears plentifully, and hubbard like a sheat tears plentifully, and blubbered like a schoolboy. Superintendents Rehm and Nelson questioned him closely, and loubting his statement, gave him in charge of Detective Dixon.

This officer searched Jardella, and found in another pocket the sum of $600, in wallet No. 2. He then went to the Matteson House and searched his baggage. Upon opening a trunk, an old razor, badly notched, was found in full sight. In the notches of this razor were ravel-lings of woollen and cotton cloth of precisely the same hue as the material of the cut panta-loons. This satisfied the detective that Jardella had robbed himself for some ulterior purpose, and he at once proceeded to search him thor-oughly. The result of the operation was that the missing $4500 was found sewed and secreted in Jardella's shirt. Upon hearing how the case stood, Superintendent Rehm incontinently kicked the fellow into the street.-Chicagi Evening Journal, 28th ult.
