SPIRITUALISM SMASHED.

Sunday Night's Seance-A L stare of Billingsgate and Pretension - Wiss Van Wie Tied by the Commutee and Beserted by the Spirits - Goodwin's Hat Broken Over His Head and Himself Taken to the Station House.

The whirligg of time does many curious things and among others it has brought about the discomfiture of Colonel Goodwin, whose researches into the mysteries of the spirit land, through the medium of Miss Van Wie, have attracted recently so much attention at the Tombs and elsewhere.

Last evening quite a large and respectable au-dience seembled at the hall, No. 614 Broadway, in up towards the bius vault of heaven, for the purpose of sharing with Miss E la, "the child of God," the beauties and de lights of spiritual intercourse, and of witnessing ica's performed for that occasion only by the friendly hands of the aforesaid spirits, whose interest in Colonel Goodwin's weekly board bill is evident and he pind. The tickets were sold at the door by a boy of ten years of age, and the reserved seat cheess were gathered in by a lovely little girl of seven, or thereabouts. At a little after eight cood-win appeared. He turned the gas up and down, looked out of the window and over the audience; then, after a vigor ous pail of his moderately developed nose, put on his spectacles, bowed his head and meditated. This done, he read some ismatic rhymings, and addressed the Supreme Deity in phrases indicative or great familiarity and but little respect. A very long chap-ter in St. Mark was read, "quite accidental," so very long that it really seemed as if the Colonel was reading against time and waiting for more quarters.

After which he said:—

"As I announc d this afternoon, I am sorry to see so few women here, but I suppose a woman must have much boldness to come after the slure and lies sent out by a corrept press. We come here to worship God in our own way, according to the dicworship Gol in our own way, according to the dictates of our own conse ence, and any one who don't like it can go to the door and get his money back. We don't miend to be interrupted or bot ered. If there is law and power enough in the city to protectus. It is a shame, but the nact, that a laws on the eve of reform reformers are insuited and shirred."

Lie then, at great length, and in a terribly boresome manner, narrated his experiences in this city, claiming great knowledge of human nature, the wickedness of society, the corruption of the press, the peculiar ways of Assistant D strict Attorney Bedford, the length of Charley Spencer's rope, and the character of his exhibitions.

It was suggested that the audience came to see and hear from the spirits, and that blackguardism simply hear from the spirits, and that blackguardism simply drove the people away; but it was of no use. Good-win really seemed bent on making a row, and raising a disturbance. His audience was quiet, respectful, long suffering, and full of fun, but he was cross-grained, sour, impertment, and abusive. He continued his nonsensical balderdash in the most airogant, high-handed and offensive manner for mor than an hour, when he graciously consented to the APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE. He accepted a Mr Doremus, of East Twelfth street, but made vigorous objection to Mr. Wash-ington Peale, formerly of Ferris' photograph gallery,

Two ladies searched Miss Van Wie in her room, and reported that, after the minutest investigation, they were convinced that she had nothing on or about her person which could ass at her in untying or cutting ropes. THE MEDIUM was then led in. She is young, not more than twenty, loosely built, but rather pretry, with mild eyes, good teach, light curly hair, no figure to speak of, an intelligent countenance and a general good look. She was taken to the box or cupboard, or ordinary construction, and seated on a common wooden chair. The Committee, Messrs, Peale and Doremus, then examined the box, and the audience commus, then examined the box, and the audience examined them. Peale is a man of thirty-five or forty years of age, with greyish hair, a keen, black eye, lank jaws, cunning expression, artistic dress, and general blage air. His colleague, Doremus, is older, with inil beard, a soft face, kind expression, and honest look. Neither are in regular business, and the audience was disposed to watch their operations closely, depending rather on Doremus to check any favoritism on the part of Peale.

favoritism on the part of Pea'e.

Pea e tied Miss Van Wie, and he tied her well.
Her wrists were bound to the chair, her arms were then bound cosely to the back, the rope ends were brought behind her and tied in the middle of the chair. Doremus then took a smaller cord and did his best to complete the security of the fastening.
Peale then tied Miss Van Wie's feet, and Dolemus looked and saw it was good.

looked and saw it was good.

In fact, they were so long about it that the audience became impatient, while the grouty Goodwin waxed impatient, and said many rough things of the hidadly style, for which he deserved kicking then and there. However, an things have an end, and so did this rope. The Committee, having shut the doors of the caoinet, substited like the rest of us, and waited for the coming of the Spirits, while Goodwin fauned himself and his dear little girl, and made friends with the people by giving them water in many cunning, childhke ways.

Ten minutes passed; a few kicks only were heard.

Twenty-five were gone; a rope's end had been heard to rap against tue board. Forty minutes, but no sign. Goodwin was rampant, but uneasy, and called in a very disrespectfully dictatorial way to the spirits, intimating his displeasure, and ordering them to We seared that the lady, who is quite delicate, might have sainted, but Goodwin pooh-poohed the idea.

Ten more minutes passed, and the Committee were summoned to look at the medium. She sat fainting and drooping, imprint her chair, whence but for the friendly cord she would have inlen. The cords had been loosened a little at the end, but all attempts to provide or undo them were intile.

The audience demanded an explanation, and Mr. Peale, who, with his coleague. Doremes, now stood redcemed before the audience, stated how he had tied the lady and his belief in her inability to untie Goodwin was nonplussed, but saucy still.

The lady fainted. Loud cries were made a multaneously for "water,"
"police," and "money." Pickpockets were expert, doctors were eager, policemen were plucky, and everybody was curious

We saw that the medium was really suffering, and, with the assistance of Officer Bean, conducted her to her room, where she was laid upon a sofa in a state of coma.

The crowd followed, but as the door was slammed quickly in their faces, they returned to torment Goodwin. That interesting imbecile stood on the platform, and with refreshing audacity attempted to come Jack Easy on his heaters by arguing the point, which they didn't see, and all of a sudden, 'qui e accidental,' his hat was jammed over his eyes, his tables upset, and his carcass in danger, when the protecting locust of Officer Bean spread its metropolitan wines above him, and husted him. its metropolitan wings above him, and hustled him away to the station-house, followed by a laughing, shouting crowd, who taunted the rash reformer, saying unto him, "Why don't you call your spiris—say?"

But while this scene was transpiring outside to the entire satisfaction of everybody but Goodwin, a very different affair was in progress in the bedroom of Mrs. Goodwin. On the ted was the sweet little girl whose beauty and artlessness had won the regard of many a man and woman in the audience, as yet in happy unconsciousness of the trouble of her mother, and the disgrace of her father; by her side lay the weeping medium, whose person was examined by the attending physician and her friends.

Ammed by the attending physician and her friends. Her wrists and arms were shockingly marked and swollen, her fingers were stiffened, and she had no control weatever of her limbs. Vigorous rubbing partially restored a healthy circulation, when she stated that almost as soon as she had been left in the cabinet she felt faint and sick at her stomach, and presently fainted away. She had been tied too tightly, but said nothing about it because she thought it could be thought it out a few moments, and she could stand it.

Mrs. Goodwin was in great distress lest some harm should happen to her husband, and the little wirl, on waking, cried most piteonsly when she failed to find her "papa." At the moment when the hittle girl was calling for her rather, a crowd of men, ht aded by a policemen, rushed into the inner bedroom, and one of them, with a cigar in his mouth, said excitedly, "There she is, officer, take her off."

We suggested that a warrant in rath be a good thing to have in case the officer intended arresting the half fainting woman, and in descrence to her evident condition the men withdrew, the officer remaining. Officer McNamara and Officer Lower, cithe Fitteenth Precinct, took charge of the door the Fitters b Precinct, took charge of the door and, a though there was much excitement at the time we left (11-30 P. M.), there had been no attempt the transfer of the lamily.

time we left (11:30 P. M.), there had been no the to disturb the women of the family.

It is thus ends the farce or last eveniful that will be done with (in dwin is a clear case he promised nothing proceedings) against a which that could do so, near distail who wanted to go the man's improved their money at the door, and offensiful dence, low tark, insulting language, ins. at receive of a creach of the public form of the public for the public form of the sessivities is for the court to determine.

Hawle, who seems to be an estimable lady, is greatly to be pitted, and that little serieve about the heart of many who would glad! thrash her father, tendrils of regard and sympathy not easily broken. Miss Van Wie may or may not be an impostor. She makes no pretensions except through Goodwin, and if appearances are at all to be tusted, she makes very little money for herself. Every rose has its thorn, and the Coonel's summer, we judge, has about come. New York Times.

A SUMMER TOUR .- The Camden and Amboy Railroad Company have completed arrange-ments with several connecting railroads leading northward, by means of which they are enabled to offer the citizens of Philadelphia a chance to take a summer tour through the most delightful sections of the continent, at much less than the usual rates of travel.

There are several different routes, from which the tourist can select one entirely to his likings. Among the places of interest which are included in the several programmes are the Delaware Water Gap, Saratoga, Lake George, Niagara Falls, the "Thousand Isles" of the St. Lawrence, Montreal, Quebec, and the White Mountains.
