Cabinet Changes.

The call by the Randall bolters of a convention to reorganize and nationalize the Union party has already achieved a success only paralleled by the colored gentleman's experience in co-opting.

How men of professed Republican convictions could remain in Mr. Johnson's Cabinet after hearing or reading his 22d of February speech, we have not been able to comprehend; and the mystery still remains unsolved.

The Duke of Nassau ought to be a potentate in the world, for he controls the springs of seltzer water which, since the days of Lord Byron, have become essential to the well-being of civilized man.

As to Mr. Harlan, we believe his seat has been at Mr. Johnson's disposal for months. No one expected him to hold it long, and it would have seemed ungracious, if not positively discourteous, had he insisted on retiring at once.

Mr. Stanton was formerly considered the radical par excellence of the Cabinet. Of late he is understood to have been brought to realize that great practical difficulties beset their way.

Whatever may be the staff contingent, it is no longer doubtful that he who adheres to the Randall-Niblack connection terminates thereby his connection, if connection he ever had, with the Lincoln-Union party.

Mr. Raymond and His Censors.

The latest exemplification of the similarity of purpose and tactics of the radical and the Copperhead press may be seen in their joint misrepresentations of the course pursued by Raymond in the Republican caucus at Washington.

Whatever may have been the precise language Mr. Raymond used, there can be no doubt that he expressed regret for the support he has given to the Philadelphia Convention, and abjured it for the future.

Now, the truth of the matter was on Friday told by our Washington correspondent. Mr. Raymond neither "expressed regret for the support he had given to the Convention," nor "abjured it for the future."

In regard to the relation borne by the Times to the movement for a Convention, no explanation, qualification, or retraction, is necessary. We have steadily maintained that to accomplish any good, the movement must be confined to moderate, conservative, and loyal men of both sections and of either party.

We have contended that by the terms of the call the extreme sectionalizing Republicans were excluded; and that if, under any pretense of conservatism, the Copperhead element of the Democracy acquires influence in the Convention, its proceedings will result in failure, so far as the object we have had in view is concerned.

The War in Western Germany.

The unconditional surrender of the King and the army of Hanover leaves Prussia without an enemy of importance in Northern Germany, and opens for her arms the road to the important Federal fortress of Mayence.

The Duke of Nassau ought to be a potentate in the world, for he controls the springs of seltzer water which, since the days of Lord Byron, have become essential to the well-being of civilized man.

The Great Popular Uprising.

The earnestness with which preparations are being made throughout the country to carry out the object of the Philadelphia Convention, gives proof of the popular appreciation of the necessity for a thorough purification of the political atmosphere.

The demagogues who expected to make the Convention a medium through which to advance their personal aspirations are shamed and baffled in the presence of the mighty popular spirit of conservatism that has responded to the call.

The Convention will have the material with which to frame an organization that from its very birth will possess all the elements of supremacy and inviolability. The party thus ushered into existence will require no slow development of partisan strength; it will pass no tedious probation; it will need no patient labors of its apostles to expose error and bring conviction of the truth; it will spring, Minerva-like, from the brain of the Jovian people, armed at all points, and invested with all the attributes of power.

complete known in the history of our political warfare, and a triumph is needed to regenerate our nationality. The radical faction must not only be defeated, it must be annihilated. The doctrine of centralization must be declared by an overwhelming majority, now and forever, a heresy incompatible with the nature of our form of government.

The Cabinet Rupture—Congress and the Administration—The Danger to the Country.

Doolittle and Dixon have been making some noise in the world. They are two conservative Republican Senators, who, earnestly adhering to the Union policy of Andrew Johnson, have been particularly active and instrumental in getting up the call for the independent National Johnson Union Convention.

The test was the endorsement of the Philadelphia Convention. As Mr. Welles, of the Navy Department, in reply to a note from Mr. Doolittle, has expressed his dissent, it is evident that the President's policy and the fully indorsement of the Philadelphia Convention, and flatly denouncing the radical policy of Congress as unconstitutional and revolutionary.
