Third Heat.—No betting. Just after getting the word, the Chief and Butler both broke badly, allowing Dexter a lead of eight lengths. The Chief was stradled first and took second posi-tion, with Butler close handy. When nearing the quarter pole, Dexter, who was going at a flying gait, suddenly broke (running past that distance in thirty-tour seconds). In the mean-time the Chief had come close up to him and Butler slightly in the rear. Dexter was got down atter losing considerably in distance, but before getting thoroughly steaded he again broke; Butler took up the lead. At the half the Chief had deprived Butler of the lead, being four lengths in the advance in 1.11, while Butler was five lengths ahead of Dexter. The very idea of Dexter winning this heat was looked upon as absurd. He, however, came down the far-stretch with wonderful rapidity, and at the three-quarters was only a length behind the Chiet, having passed Butler. fo-ronto Chief broke soon after passing into the home-stretch, and Dexter to a commanding lead, and won the heat seven lengths shead of Builer, who was leading the Chief a single length. Time-2.22. If the time had been taken from the spot where Dexter squared aimself for the last third of a mile, the figures would doub-less appear almost fabulous. This was a glorious termination to the day's sport, and will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to witness such a performance. A spontaneous burst of cheers resounded throughout the enclosure when Dexter was declared the winner.
