The New Complication in Europe.

From the Tribune. The great question, whether there will be peace in Europe? has not yet been officially answered.

As regards Prussia, Count Bismark would be likely to have little or no objection to indemnifying Austria for her territorial losses.

On the whole, the complications in Europe have, by the latest steps of the French Government, again become more serious.

France.

From the Times. The French people have surely reason to be proud of the present position of their country.

To compare the France of to-day with France under the first Empire would be unjust and improper.

Modern France dates from the outbreak of the first Revolution, in 1789, the days of her Grand Monarque, of her Richelieu and Mazarin.

The terrible Revolution, with its oceans of blood, was a tremendous retribution for all the lust and dissoluteness that had ruled uppermost in France for nearly a century.

A sorry time followed for France for the next fifteen years under the "Restoration." The Bourbons have "learned nothing and forgotten nothing," and gratitude to the allies who restored them to the throne made the Bourbons their subservient tools.

This closes the second epoch of modern French history—the first period of military greatness under Napoleon, the second the period of degradation under the Bourbons and Orleans.

From the Liberator, or rather boyish attempts at Strasbourg and Boulogne, through the prison gates of Ham, to the first of the Bourbon Restoration, there ran ten years of time, and not less occurred in the life of Louis Napoleon than could approach, much less resemble in massive, heroic features, the career of his uncle.

The Admission of Tennessee—President Johnson Master of the Situation.

The adoption by the Senate of the House joint resolution, slightly amended, recognizing the State of Tennessee as restored to the Union, and consequently entitled to representation in Congress, practically settles the question in regard to the South.

The pretense put forward by the radicals to cover up their abandonment of what they called their principles, is that the Legislature of Tennessee has ratified the Constitutional amendment proposed by the Congress.

lets in a more demoralized condition than ever. The abandonment of their platform will gain them no popularity, but it will deprive them of all their really honest, though misguided supporters.

They have accused the President of usurpation of power; but now they endorse his whole policy. They fear nothing so much as to be proved wrong than their dislike to the President, and they have inadvertently paid him a high compliment by admitting his own state first of all.

The people also have other issues to settle with the radicals; they do not see any ground for a compromise with a man whose extravagance, his corruption, his public swindles, and his private peccadilloes, because it has at last confessed its imbecility regarding restoration.

Admission of Tennessee.

From the Daily News. The process by which the State of Tennessee is being reinstated into the political household is one that confounds so much with the principles of our form of government, that Congress is sorely perplexed in attempting to carry out the details.

It is true that Tennessee and other States have been for a time without representation in the Central Legislature, but that was the consequence not of any usurpation of the rights of State existence, but of the usurpation of a fact on that had taken possession of the National Capitol, and in the exercise of an authority to which they had no claim.

But we are willing to leave to the radical Congress the poor gratification of seeming to conquer the South a boon, and to let the fact acknowledging, upon compulsion, an inalienable right, if our enemies permit our reinforcements to march into our camp, we will not too closely question whether they come by the ways or by the highways.

The admission of Tennessee is the first step towards restoring the Union, and the most difficult. The radicals are bold and stubborn, but they have been compelled to take a step backwards, and in their case retrogression means a consciousness of defeat.

The Dignity of Congress.

From the World. The dignity of the House of Representatives has been vindicated against General Rousseau, of Kentucky, who had infringed upon that awful thing by laying his rascal on the shoulders of a scurvy little political person named Grinnell.

Speaker Colfax made his reprimand of General Rousseau as short as possible; but he could not make it so short that it should not give him an account for himself in the established vernacular of their section.

pigeon-holes, sent to the press some time since an epistle from our Portuguese friend, Mr. Minister Harvey.

This epistle Thaddeus Stevens and his friends consider that Mr. Harvey had no business to write; and by way of letting all our foreign Ministers know that they are a lot of swamps and lackeys, with no right to opinions of their own, these liberal politicians make up their minds that if Mr. Sumner and the Senate would not agree to cut off Harvey's rations by name in the Diplomatic Appropriation bill, the mission to Portugal should be abolished outright.

These PROSECUTIONS.—There are seven literary journals in Paris which have been prosecuted by the Government for having treated of political matters.
