REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

PAPERS FROM THE OVERLOOR HOUSE. J. B. Lippincom & Co.: Philadelphia. The little work before us is well conceived, and in some respects remarkably well executed. The plan is skiltully designed. The work is supposed to be written in the early part of the century, and minute descriptions are given of the grand old fireplaces, unrivalled hospitality, and genial kindness which has ceased with the death of the gentlemen of the old school. The pictures are vivid, and so tinged with a heartiness and pleasant warmth, that that we find ourselves wishing we, too, were at the Overlook House, enjoying its hospitalities. The young visitor having gone there, and having become enamored with the daughter of his host, is shown a curious collection of manuscripts, contributions from every guest who has spent the Christmas time beneath that almost baronial roof. It is these essays which constitutes the bulk of the work. They are most of them pleasant stories, sketches of quaint characters or poems. The stories are all well told, although rather too prolix in certain details. The characters sketched are unique and skilfully exccuted, while the poetical portion of the volume bad better pass unnoticed. The poems possess neither originality, rhythm, nor point. The sentences of some of them are skilfully constructed, but as a whole, the genius of the author does not run smoothly in numbers. No clue is given to the authorship, though no one need be ashamed to own the book as his production. The only fault in the conception of the book is that after the "papers" are cdited

Some months since "Le Docteur Rouge" first appeared in Paris, and took the literary world by storm. It was highly spoken of as a spicy and exciting novel of good parts and well pre served throughout. It is an historical romance of the latter years of the last century, and treats of all the plots and counterplots of monarchies in those turbulent days. It is of interest, both because of the introduction of certain historical characters, and also because of its literary style, It is translated by D'Aramis with remarkable facility, and the quaintness of the idiom is admirably preserved. It will be generally read by those who keep the run of foreign Wal, I. Harper & Brothers. J. B. Lippineott & Co., Philadelphia agents.

Like the twenty other histories of the war previously laid before us, the present one treats of events with which we are all familiar. It embraces a consistent and well-woven narrative of all the transactions of our war until the retreat from the Peninsula, under McClellan. It particularly recommends itself because of the abundance of its admirable wood cuts. Likenesses of all the leading men of both sides are introduced, and they are the best pictures we have seen. The work also abounds in pictures ot battles, sites, and reviews. It is of the largest size, being similar in form to a modern atlas.

HOW I MANAGED MY HOME ON £200 A YEAR, By Mr.s Warren. Loring: Boston. G. W. Pitcher, No. 898 Chesnut street, Philadelphia agent. To ladies we recommend this little work. We do not say whether they can derive any good from it or not, as our knowledge of the art of cooking and housekeeping is not sufficient to warrant us giving an opinion. We can recommend it as a pleasant little novelette, and one whose object at least is commendable. We are glad to be informed that £200 is $1000, as we are told on the title-page, cover, and preface. It is well to be informed of such things. As a sample of the style of living it recommends, we give the meals which the fortunate possessor of $1000 is to receive at his home:-

Roast beef, Yorkshire pudding, Potatoes, Horseradish sauce, A tart or pudding. Cold beef, Rosst potatoes, Salad, cressed, Whole rice pudding without eggs.

LITERARY NOTES.

-The following sketch of the oldest book firm in our city we extract from a New York exchange:-

MATTHEW CARRY AND HIS SUCCESSORS. "In 1793 Mr. Carey commenced bookselling and printing, on a small scale, in a small store. Not having juli-bound books enough to fill the shelves, he supplied their place with spelling books. For twenty-five years he was present summer and winter, at the opening of his store, and was generally in it all day long. When the yellow lever raged in Philadelphia in 1793, he was an active member of the committee of health, of which Stephen Girard was head, and wrote a 'History of the Yellow Fever in 1793,' which passed through four editions. In 1796 he co-operated with Bishop White and half-a-dozen laymen to establish the first Sunday School society in America. In the same year he was dragged into a paper war with William Cobbett, who there were believed in the same year he was dragged into a paper war with William Cobbett, eupiniad,' soon silenced him.

"From the first, Mr. Carey's bookstore, though small, was successful. He printed a large edition of 'Guthrie's Geography' (a most amusing as well as instructive book), in quarto, to the extent of 2500 copies, at $12, with a folio atlas of torty or fifty maps, which was in advance of all the rest of the trade in America at the time. He produced, far superior to the London edition, 3000 copies of Goldsmith's 'Animated Nature,' in four volumes octavo, at $10, doubling the original number of plates by using the chief part of the engravings of Buffon's 'Natural His-tory.' But his great work was brought out in 1801, being 3000 copies of the Bible in quarto, who then was a publisher in Philadelphia, and attacking him in verse and prose in the 'Por-

Cambridge, three Oxford, six Edinburgh, and two American Bibles, and produced a more cor-rect letter-press than had ever been obtained. It was called the 'standing edition,' because, sterredtypes not having come into use, the entire volume was kept, in type to snoply the demand volume was kept in type to supply the demand for reimpressions. In 1802 he was elected by the Senate of the State a Director of the Bank of Pennsylvania, and in June that year succeeded in obtaining in New York a large meeting of the printers and booksellers of the United States, the object being, as at the great literary fairs in Frankfort and Leipsic, to reciprocally buy, sell, and exchange their respec-tive publications. After four or five years' experiment the project, which had not worked well, was abandoned.

"In 1814, Mr. Carey wrote and published the 'Olive Branch,' of which 10,000 copies were sold, the object being to harmonize the two antago-nistic parties of the country. Edition after edition went off, fresh matter being constantly added. Mr. Matthew Carey's last work of im-partance was published in 1822, being Essays on Political Economy, in which being the says on Political Economy,' in which the leading idea is protection to native industry and manufactures. Mr. Duyckinck states that from 1819 to 1823 Matthew Carey published no less than fifty-nine separate pamphlets in favor of a protective tariff, amounting to 23,022 pages, and having an immense circulation.

"By this time Matthew Carey was in prosper-ous circumstances. His business had gradually extended, until he became one of the largest, and certainly was not the least enterprising and intelligent, of American booksellers. Following the fash on of the time, he had entered largely with the advantage of a good education and discriminative judgment, into the republication of the best English books,

"Henry C Carey, his son, born in December, 1793, was extremely well educated. His own and his father's wish made the book business his own, and ne entered the store at the early age of cight, reading and digesting many books and thus unconsciously preparing himself for the authorship which was to be his self-devoted labor of later years, and the instruction of a large and popular circle of readers and believers. On attaining his majority, in 1814, Mr. H. C. Carey became his father's partner, and the firm was Carey & Son until 1821, when Mathew Carey at Son until 1821, when Mathew Carey retired, and the firm of Carey & Les was formed—the partners being brothers-in-law. Mr. H. C. Carey remained leading partner when, in 1825, the firm of Carey, Lea & Carey was established—the junior partner being Mr. Edward Carey. In 1828 the firm server. being Mr. Edward Carey. In 1828 the firm sepapering Mr. Edward Carey. In 1828 the firm separated into Carey & Lea and Carey & Hart. On the retirement of Henry C. Carey from the first of these houses, in 1836, Mr. Isaac Lea, the remaining partner, admitted his brother in law into partnership, and the firm of Lea & Blanchard was formed—subsequently Blanchard & Lea, but reduced to Henry C. Lea in 1865 by Mr. Blanchard's leaving the content. chard's leaving the concern. The firm of Carev & Hart ranked very high among American pub-lishers; and among the distinctive works which t issued may be named the collection of contemporary British essayists—Carlyle, Macaulay, Tallourd, Jeffrey, Sidney Smith, Allison, Mackintosh, etc.—the publication of which in this country led to their issue in a collective form by the writers in London and Edinburgh. Carey & Hart dealt liberally with native authors. About eleven years ago Carev & Hart retired, and Messrs. Jesse Parry & McMillan took their place at the southeast corner of Chesnut and Fourth streets. In 1857 the panic-tempest which

"The original business was greatly enlarged after H. C. Carey became his father's partner, and was extended by him into channels pre-viously almost wholly unexplored. He it was who engraited the medical branch upon the general business. In 1824 he established the system of trade sales, which has ever since been the great medium of exchange between American publishers and booksellers. Before he quitted trade Mr. H. C. Carey broke into authorship with an 'Essay on the Rate of Wages,' in which it was shown that, besides probity and intelligence, he had inherited his father's leading views on political economy. From this work Frederic Bastiad copied its leading ideas. It has been translated into French, Italian, and Swedish. It was expanded (1837-40) into the 'Principles of Political Economy,' in three volumes octavo—decidedly and rationally anti-Malthusian. Perhaps Mr. Carey's most important work—certainly that by which he is best known, and which has been translated into several foreign languages—is the 'Principles of Social Science' (1858-60), in three volumes octavo. "Henry C. Lea, of the late house of Blanchard & Lea, and grandson of Matthew Carey, is the only member of the family now in the book trade. In Sansom street, near Seventh, Mr. Lea has just erected a handsome building for the publication of original and foreign medical and surgical works. Chief among the former are the 'Medical Lexicon, etc., of Dr. Robley Dunglison, of Philadelphia. Mr. Lea also publishes the American Journal of the Medical Sciences (quarterly), edited by Dr. Isaac Hays and a monthly magazine, the Medical News and

-The Kound Table of this week has an article on "Wanted-A Literary Exchange," which we publish below. The idea suggested is a good one, and many of its features are already found in the Press Club of Philadelphia. To be sure, the Club is not a business society for judging of literary merit; but it is the grand resort for all journalists from other cities, who desire to know or become acquainted with the press of Philadelphia. A good library of reference is secured, and papers and magazines kept on file. We consider it as near such an exchange as the Round Table suggests as the idea in practice will allow.

We give below the article:-"It is a little remarkable that no one has ever established in this city a general exchange or bureau for the sale and purchase of literary wares. The field is certainly very broad and entirely unoccupied, while the promise of pecu-niary reward appears to us to be very great. The only attempt that has ever in the mintest degree approached to the plan we have in mind was made by the late Mr. Park Benjamin. But this was of too little consequence to be considered as a test, although Mr. Benjamin was flooded with manuscripts and with literary commissions of every conceivable kind. The time has fully come for something more than thisfor an institution that shall give to every writer in the land a fair market for the disposition of his works—the valuations to be made by a disinterested board. The purpose of this article is to explain the manner in which we think such a plan could be accomplished, and the advantages that would accrue alike to writers and publishers.

"In the first place, the movement should be taken in hand by an association of gentlementaken in hand by an association of gentlemen—like the Century Club or the University Club of this city—who would give it character and literary ability. But as this might not be feasible at the beginning, a small club could be organized, to be known as the Association for the Encouragement of American Writers, and who would have little difficulty in perfecting arrangements for an exchange. Rooms should be secured in some central locality—central to the publishers—where literary characters or publishers would find if pleasant to call. Papers and magazines should be kept on file, and there e secured in some central locality-central to should be desks for writing, and rooms especially for conversation. Of course these arrangements and conveniencies would be but arrangements and conveniencies would be but of minor importance when compared with the main object or the exchange. This ought to be the careful criticism and valuation of manuscripts of all kinds—whether books or newspaper articles. For this purpose competent persons should be employed whose judgment would be correct, and for whose services good salaries should be paid. And, when desired, manuscripts could be submitted to publishers and editors, and an opinion given of their merits which might be of advantage to the writer, or perchance to the publisher. In this way authors would not be so much at the mercy of publishers, while publishers would be spared a vast daal of annoyance. Especially would it prove of great advantage to writers who are unknown, and who must of necessity price $10. He paid a clergyman $1000 to insert various additional references. He collated, to secure accuracy of text, four London, three

"An important feature of the institution we "An important feature of the institution we suggest might be a burean of general information. For instance, if a man in a remote part of the country chance to be writing upon a subject requiring facts and figures which he cannot have access to, he might obtain through the exchange all the information desired. This department, we think, would become a very essential one, since the libraries could be drawn upon so castly and so treely. And see a legitimate adso easily and so treely. And as a legitimate adjunct of this, the exchange might easily undertake to supply lycoums and lecture associations with lecturers, keeping complete lists of speakers, with their appointments. This would obviate a very great deal of correspondence and vexation on the part of committees. The exchange could also most demands in the line most demands and line most also meet demands in the line of autographs and coins, and it would be no small item in its proper coins, and it would be no small item in its proper province to provide journals with editors, libraries with librarians, schools with teachers, publishers with writers, and societies with lecturers.

"The question will ere this be asked, 'How ir all this to be accomplished, and who will pay for it?" Our idea is that the exchange should be supported by yearly fees constituting membership and entitling to all the privileges of the institution. A person paying a certain sum to institution. A person paying a certain sum to have the right to submit manuscripts and use all the advantages pertaining to the agency; and all others to have access to its privileges upon the payment of prices according to some estab-lished schedule. In this way we believe it could not only be made paying but profitable. And if it should be begun upon a scale of suffi-cient magnitude, it would have a character and would be patronized by the most eminent as well as the unknown. Why should there not be a literary as well as any other exchange?"
