STEPHENS, the Vice-President of the late Confederate States, was born in Taliaterro county, Georgia, February 11, 1812. In 1836 he entered the lower House of the State Legislature, serving for five years, devoting himself especially to internal improvements. In 1842 he entered the State Senate. In 1843 he was elected to the lower House of Corgress, being regularly reelected seven times, and serving until 1859. His career in connection with the Rebellion is too familiar to the people to need repetition here. His celebrated speech before the Sece sion Convention of Georgia, delivered November 14, 1850, was one of the grandest defenses of the Union that was ever made. But his ambition deluded him into accepting the Vice-Presidency of the Confederacy, and on the 21st of March, 1861, he made another great speech at Savannal, in exposition and vindication of the Confederate Constitution, in the course of which occurs the following memorable passage:-"This stone (the great truth that the negro is not equal to the white man), which was urst rejected by the arst builders, is become the chief stone of the corner of our new edifice," Mr. Stephens now claims a seat in the United States Senate, having been elected to that position over the Hon. Joshua Hill.

JOHNSON, who will be Stephens' colleague in the United States Senate when Georgia is fully reconstructed, was borne in Burke county, Georgia, September 18, 1812, and is by protession a lawyer. In 1844 he was a Presidential elector. In 1848 he entered the United States Senate, to till an unexpired term. In 1849 he was elected a judge of the Superior Court of the State, In 1500, when Senator Fitzpatrick, of Alabama, declined the Douglas nomination for Vice-President, Mr. Johnson was selected for the position by the National Executive Committee of that wing of the Democratic party. During the Rebeltion he was a member of the Confeacrate Senate.
