ENGLISH NOTES ON AMERICA.

Descriptions of Distinguished Men—What an Englishman Saw in the Oil Regions.

Under the title of "America During and After the War," Mr. Robert Ferguson, author of "Swiss Men and Swiss Mountains," has written a book about his recent travels in the United States, which is published in London by Longman, Green & Co. Mr. Ferguson makes fewer blunders than English travellers usually fall into, and is evidently a hearty admirer of some of the public men of this country. He makes fun of certain national peculiarities, which are as sharply criticized by cultivated Americans themselves as by foreigners, but in the main his book is not only pleasant but accurate.

While in Boston he seems to have had the opportunity of seeing the best literary society, and he gives the following sketches:—

Longfellow.

I found him in his study, an elegant and cheerful room, in one corner of which a fine orange tree, with its golden fruit, keeps green the memory of a departed friend, the late Professor Felton. The table is strewn with books and presentation copies in various languages—ay, even in Chinese. But the ways of the Chinese are not as our ways, and this presentation copy was in the shape of a fan, on which a poet of the Flowery Land had written a translation of the "Psalm of Life;" and if the translation were only as good as the writing, assuredly the work was well done. Though the features of the poet have been made familiar to us by many pictures and photographs, yet no one can see him for the first time without being struck with his appearance. His expression of mingled dignity and gentleness has been fairly presented to us; but the peculiar sweetness of his smile and the touch of spiritual beauty which often plays upon his features cannot be rendered in a likeness. Before him lies the ever open Dante, his translation of which, a labor of love, which has occupied him for years, now approaches to completion. But Dante has not his undivided regard, and hardly would the picture of Longfellow in his study be complete without, ever and anon, through one of the "three doors left unguarded," a little figure stealing gently in, laying an arm around his neck as he bends over his work, and softly whispering some childish secret in his ear. Then, too, his work was interrupted by visitors of another sort, for among travellers of all nations the tour in America would hardly be considered complete without a visit to Craigie House. And speaking fluently French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, and having also a knowledge of Danish and of Dutch, it may well be supposed that there seldom comes a traveller with whom the poet cannot, if need be, hold converse in his own tongue.

Stories about Queer Visitors.

And sometimes there come other visitors, too, self-introduced—a class to whom the customs of America show more tolerance than they do with us. I remember, during the period of my stay, a Western man, comically quaint and cool, who came with a request to see the pictures at Craigie House. On two successive days he came, and for three or four good hours was Dante thrown aside while, with an amused good-humor, the poet answered all his odd questions, and showed him everything there was to be seen. Then there came very many others craving assistance in sickness or sorrow, and to these a deaf ear is never turned. No man's income can be a secret in America; the income tax returns are open to public inspection; and the newspapers amuse their readers by classified lists of the incomes of prominent merchants, literary men, politicians, and others. Mr. Longfellow is endowed with an income far exceeding that which is generally supposed to fall to the lot of poets; and, as he never refuses to listen to any tale of distress, the number of applicants, worthy and unworthy, who find their way to his gate is by no means small. The airs which some of the American beggars give themselves are very amusing. I remember the case of a man who came with his arm in a sling, representing himself to have been wounded in the service of his country. Mr. Longfellow, having some suspicion, asked to be allowed to look at the wounded arm. "It is not a pleasant sight to show a gentleman," said the man. "Perhaps not, but we are obliged sometimes to look at unpleasant things." "Well, sir," said the man, drawing himself up, "if that is the light in which you look at the matter, I would rather not be beholden to you for assistance, and so I wish you good morning." Then there was another man upon whom, in response to his tale of hunger and distress, there was bestowed a handsome loaf. Now, the least that any English beggar would have done under the circumstances, would have been to have taken the loaf and converted it into gin. But this would have been beneath the spirit of an American beggar, and so he resented the insult to his dignity by depositing the loaf as he passed out, like an ornament, on the top of the gate post.

The War.

At Cragie House I found the poet's eldest son, "called by men Charlie," as Mr. Hughes says—a fine young fellow not yet of age, recovering from a wound—having been shot through the body, from which nothing but youth and a good constitution could have saved him. Having listed in the first instance as a private in the artillery, he was, as soon as found [illegible] to be a lieutenant's commission out, appointed Massachusetts cavalry, [illegible] in a regiment of [illegible]. He confirmed the statements I had heard elsewhere as to the [illegible] of the Confederate cavalry to a charge of cold steel, their favorite way of fighting being with the pistol—a habit, perhaps, acquired before they had any Federal cavalry to cope with. There are few of the distinguished men of the North who have not lost sons or near relatives fighting for the Union; the record is given by Mr. Hughes in the January number of Frazer's Magazine, and a noble roll it is. And we may well believe that these men, thus giving up all they held most dear in the cause, should feel bitterly the cruel and unjust taunt put forth in some of the English papers of that time, that they were carrying on a miserable conflict by the aid of hired aliens. How in any one case "miserable?" The term implies either an inadequate cause or an unworthy foe. The Chinese war, with Armstrong guns against bows and arrows, might be called a miserable war—perhaps even the war in New Zealand. But a war which, looked at in the lowest point of view, was carried on to preserve the integrity of a great nation, whether we sympathized with its object or not, had no right to be called by such a name.

Sumner.

A frequent visitor at Cragie House, when Congress is not sitting, is Charles Sumner, the scholarly Senator for Massachusetts, and the representative man of New England politics. And an interesting sight it was to see these two men, Longfellow and Sumner, so kindred and yet so different, sitting together on the eve of the great contest which was to decide the place of America in the world's history—Sumner with the poet's little daughter nestling in his lap, for he is a man to whom all children come—calmly discussing some question of European literature. Mr. Sumner seemed to feel deeply the defection of certain of the old anti slavery leaders of England from the Northern cause in the great crisis of the struggle, and all the more because New England had always been a link, by this common sympathy, between the old country and the new.

Lowell.

A frequent guest, too, is J. Russell Lowell, who succeeded to the professorship of the English language and literature in Harvard University, formerly held by Mr. Longfellow. Mr. Lowell, the most remarkable of a remarkable family, though best known to the world by his humor, takes a high rank in many departments of literature, and the general complaint among his countrymen is only that he writes too little. He has given a high character to humor, because he has used it for a high purpose, in selecting it as the weapon to fight the battle of opinion among his countrymen. When we remember that there are few men who have suffered in their families as Lowell has during the war, his lines—

"God's price ez high, but nothin' else
Then wut He sells wears along"

rise into something of solid pathos. Perhaps to those who saw in the great struggle of the last four years nothing but a subject for highly-spiced articles to amuse the English public this, along with some of Mrs. Howe's stirring lyrics, may seem "profane." To those who, like myself, look upon it as the greatest battle between freedom and slavery that the world has ever seen, the profaneness is on the other side. In conversation brilliant and amusing, Mr. Lowell is one of the persons in whose company one can scarcely be without carrying away something worthy to be remembered.

Agassiz.

And often, too, comes Agassiz, with his gentle and genial spirit, his childlike devotion to science, and—or he would not be true son of his adopted country—his eager interest in the politics of the day. We went to hear one of his lectures at the University, not one of what are considered the popular lectures, but one of a special course to a small class. Yet it was deeply interesting, the subject being the shell of the nautilus, and the question whether the nautilus forms its own habitation, and if so, in what manner. In clear and terse English, though with a slightly foreign accent, he traced the course of scientific observation up to the present time, indicating the questions which still remained to be solved, and suggesting the points to which the attention of inquirers should now be more especially directed. He wound up with some general remarks, in the course of which he exhorted his hearers to strive to take the same pleasure in the scientific discoveries of others as in their own—a noble aim, yet, ah! how difficult to attain! I believe, however, that if there are any persons capable of so much single-mindedness, Agassiz is one of them. Between the poet and the naturalist there exists a very warm friendship, and among other poetical tributes, Mr. Longfellow has achieved the feat—for so it must seem to us with our rigid English tongues—of addressing to his friend in the October number of the Atlantic Monthly a gay and graceful chanson in his native language. And often, too, comes Dana, one of the most charming of talkers, and, more especially with his sea stories, enthralling the circle of young and old. Nor should the poet's brother, Mr. Samuel Longfellow, be omitted from the list, a scholar and a critic, who, if he had been the only one of his name, might have been better known as a writer both in prose and verse.

The Oil Region.

Mr. Ferguson gives interesting accounts of the Pennsylvania oil district. He says:—"A wonderful place is Pithole, a city eight months old, with ten thousand inhabitants, twelve hotels, a daily paper, and a 'temple of fashion,' billiard rooms innumerable, a theatre and an 'academy of music,' the bills of which announcing 'a musical matinee on Saturday afternoon,' were stuck all about the town. But the streets are nothing but rivers of mud, across which you may occasionally see an individual wading in a pair of huge jack-boots, but which ordinary pedestrians can only traverse at certain places, leaping from point to point, as you cross the stepping-stones of a brook. The city of Pithole owes its existence to a celebrated flowing well struck in the valley below, which had been for many months producing at a rate of one thousand barrels per day, and the fame of which had naturally attracted crowds of speculators from all quarters, eager to try their luck in the same neighborhood. Making our way among the forest of derricks on the hillside, we came at last to the side of the famous well. We entered an enclosed yard, containing a number of gigantic vats, into which the precious stream kept constantly flowing night and day, leaving nothing for the workmen to do but to draw it off, and barrel it as fast as they could. With what seemed to me a curious amount of incaution, considering the terrible result that would arise from an accidental spark, they allowed us to walk unguarded through the place, and even to climb up and look into the huge tank into which, with a deep rumbling noise, the oil was vomited forth from the bowels of the earth in great spasmodic jets. A well like this, which on an outlay of £1000 or £2000 must have been returning an income to its fortunate proprietors of something like £150,000 a year, is one of those great prizes which have a fascination to the pursuit of the oil-seeker. Its production, however, is thrown into the shade by that of a well lately discovered in Western Virginia, and which, according to the published account, was flowing at the rate of three thousand barrels a day. All around the great United States well men were busy boring in every direction, up to the verge of its territory, in the eager hope of tapping the reservoir from which its bounteous streams were supplied. But though the general results of the operations in the district had been successful, no such second prize had as yet fallen to the lot of any speculator."

Advertising.

The dead-wall advertising struck our traveller oddly:—

"The great advertisers in America scorn to confine themselves to newspapers, they stamp their advertisements on the face of nature; so that not only he who runs may read, but must read whether he likes or not. Every prominent rock, not only in the White Mountain district, but along the beautiful banks of the Hudson, and in every place where travellers most do congregate, is carefully painted in large letters with the name of some specific or other, the most persistently obtrusive being the 'Plantation Bitters' and 'Sozodont,' a preparation for the teeth. If you stand by the Profile Mountain to gaze on the wonderful old stone face, your eye is arrested by 'Drake's Plantation Bitters;' if you pause by the Echo Lake to listen, you are met by invitations to 'Try the Sozodont.' 'And echo replies, O! don't,' wrote a wag underneath. The greatest bit in the advertising line was made by the proprietors of the former on the occasion of the celebration of Independence Day in Boston, when, as usual, there was a grand display of fireworks, and all Boston was there to see. The final tableau had just died away in darkness when, in a moment, before the spectators had time to turn away their eyes, another shower of many-colored flames lighted up the sky, and in all the glory of fire leaped out the words, 'Drake's Plantation Bitters!' And not in vain are all these ingenious devices, if we may trust the statement put forth by the proprietors of this article that there were sold during the past year one hundred and seventy-nine miles of bottles. On my last visit to Boston there was another article called Buchu, the name of which met my eyes at every turn, and I never could see it without wondering how it was pronounced, till at last, if I had remained many days in America, I should in utter desperation have gone and bought a bottle to set my mind at rest. They serve, too, sometimes, a very quaint way of calling attention to their advertisements. Thus I saw at St. Louis the walls placarded in very large letters with the words, 'As pure as a soul without sin.' Drawing near with a natural curiosity to know what that could be which had claim to such a title, I read in very small letters:—'The unfermented bread.'"

WHISKY, BRANDY, WINE, ETC.

CHESNUT GROVE WHISKY.
No. 225 North THIRD Street.
If anything was wanted to prove the absolute purity of this Whisky, the following certificates should do it. There is no alcoholic stimulant known commanding such recommendation from such high sources:—
PHILADELPHIA, September 9, 1858.
We have carefully tested the sample of CHESNUT GROVE WHISKY which you send us, and find that it contains NONE OF THE POISONOUS SUBSTANCES known as FUSIL OIL, which is the characteristic and injurious ingredient of the whiskies in general use.

NEW YORK September 3 1858
I have analyzed a sample of CHESNUT GROVE WHISKY received from Charles Wharton, Jr., Philadelphia; and having carefully tested it, I am pleased to state that it is entirely FREE FROM POISONOUS OR DELETERIOUS substances. It is an unusually pure and fine-flavored quality of whisky.
JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D.,
Analytical Chemist
BOSTON, March 7, 1859
I have made a chemical analysis of commercial samples of CHESNUT GROVE WHISKY, which proves to be free from the heavy Fusil Oils, and perfectly pure and unadulterated. The fine flavor of this whisky is derived from the grain used in manufacturing it.
Respectfully, A. A. HAYES, M. D.,
State Assayer, No. 16 Boylston street.
