In the balance. Wesley was sent to this school through the influ-ence of those who were interested in the education of the children of the cleryy. Mirs. Wesley hore an honored name-the name of Arms'ey (Amsley). We are told that Wesley was grave, and attentive to his studies in early after are told that Wes ey was grave, and altentive to his studies to early alc. He was not only in youth a boy well disciplined, but you find that he received from his moth r a philosoph firshly useful in after hic. I notice that, on his first mornings, long before the other scholars were up, be was out and away, scamporing around the old Charter House, playing while his school-mates lay napping. Some of them afterwards said to hem ---'Joan, why do you get up so early in the London fog-this damp for for 'His reply was:--''l did it because my motiver told me.'' (Applanse,) Thus in the outset of ice, he hid down that grand rule st conduct which, by the biessing of God, led to great and wise remits.

Thus, in the outset of disc, he hald down that grand rule el conduct which, by the biessing of God, led to great and wise realts. "The find him, in the year when he had attained the are of seventeen, entering the grand old college of Oxford, to commence an academic career. In Eng-land, among the lower classes, who are far removed from k, owil dge, there was a general be let that Mr. Wesley was an oncultivated function, but this belief was soon uprocted. "In Wesley commence of his ecclesiastical career with all the avidity of a young ambitious man, who felt that there may before him a career of g ory. He be-came not only an excellent Latin schour, working in the most persev ring way for the accomplishment of the great benefit which that language would give here but we are told that he read and spoke in the Latin language with a power that astonished his own futors. Mounting the pyramid of Greek learn-ing, he entered fully into the Greek school, and read with the utmost skill from the old scho astic tri-bures. He mastered it; and so apt did he become is it that he could discern its riches with the taste of a crisic, so as to become acquainted with the is that he could discern its riches with the taste of a crisic, so as to become acquainted with the inter and more refined beauties of that classical torgue. We find him well posted in mathematics, and a perfect master in the art of debate. He toos his stand in the University of Oxford, agreeably to his degree of Bachelor of Arts. H made himself master of the leading characteristics in the history of our nation; he went into nothing that dissipated the mind or weakens the brain. He stands forth as one who has done much for the extension of scholarto power among the rising generation.
It seems to me there are two gloties in America that cannot be debated or disputed: -The gloty of your free churches these churches that could have done what this Mehodist Church has done; and the glory of your free schools--hiat great glory that destroys the monotopy of learning, and that covers the ground of the Republic with the banner of light and the banner of Coristian teaching. (App ause)
But I was this classical craving of John Wesley, with the ellorous attainments of his copy of the area pointed of the group and the glory end in the stiments of his conge career, that culminated in the schot of his colare energy.

I say that it seems natural that this distinguished English scholar should be said to be filled with justical impulses and passions, as a man incapable of approxiating the nicer beauties of art, or the suble disquisitions of philosophy, or the brilliant beauties of cultivated inteliects, either in art, poetry, philosophy. It is obvious that Mr. Wesley was a well-read scholar, a man or jearning, a distinguished reatizant, and i do not only lay size s on these great features of the Gospel.

hearts of a.1, from the days that the Puritans first landed on Plymonth Rock. He turned his attention to these scattered S ates on this American continent. With all the ardor of a noble resolve, ho determined to visit these colonies. It is difficult to say what passed in the mind of Mr. Wesley when he crossed the Atlantic to settle down in the State of Georgia—a very difficult State to settle in for a gentieman like Mr. Wesley, for he brought his notions of discipline, which, no doubt, caused his failure to be satisfied with the country. Georgia was a State co-rupfed at this time by the great evil of slavery, and we cannot forgot his impressive words. "that the English nation was re-sponsible for slavery," and also "that slavery was the sum total of all human villance." After two yeats" experience in the New World he left Ame-rica. He arrived on the shores of the Continent in 1785, and in 1728 he left America, speaking those emphatic words. "I shake the dust from my feet." And yet it was this visit to America that became of great service to the sportual life of this emment man and servant of God. It was on that day, when out on the Atlantic, in the milist of a mighty storm, he observed men and women who, while the storm was howing, and the waves were dashing over the boat—that great storm so typical of the storm of nife —he saw with astonishment that these plainly dressed people were Moravians German men and women, who were quiet—the women kiniting while an awial desth stared them in the face. Mr. Wesley, with all the experience he possessed, was supprised, as ne said to them, "How is it that you can be thus placed in the haldst of this s.orm?" and they gave him that ever-memorable answer, which ought to be engraved on the soul of every person, "The Chris-tian is never atraid to die." It was not the yeave him that ever-memorable answer, when ought to be engraved on the soul of every person, "The Chris-tian is never atraid to die." It was not the yeave him that ever-memorable answer, whench ought to be engra

Le returned to London, and wonded his way up Fleet street, up a havrow lane, goes into a little meeting-house where the Moravian brethren and sisters piray; he mugles his voice in prayer with them, and of its carnescness, all have but to think of the emotion that swayed him on board the vessel on the stormy Atlantic. He was there a devoted church etergyman. Fired with zeal, he resolved, if possible, to devote himself to greater energy in the service of the Church of Eugland. Instead of being element in declamation, in-stead of being excited is intense frenzy, it is our duty to say that Weeley was a quet preacher, per-suasive, with a knowledge of the wants of human na ure-with marvellous klowledge of the Gospel, with the most intimate familiarity with the weakness and gratifications of men, with great powers of and gratifications of men, with great powers of appea ing and denunciation. Wesley ent red into a convenation with Whitfield on certain questions touching coerrnal matters, in which they materially differed. Wesley preached the Lutheran justification by faith. Whitfield dif-fered on certain actinitions.

It was this great teaching of Wesley that led so It was this great teaching of Wesley that led so many to conversion and Christiantry, where must be iound the highest order of Christian perfectaon. Wesley soon created a strong feeling. I know not how tar this extended, but one thing I know is cer-tain, there was a feeling that led to the conversion of thousands. Drunkards were made soler; b as-phemers were derivared from blauphening, and clothod in their right mind. They chered the Church, they sang with paa'ms in their hands, "Hal-pelujah' halle bight?"

In the year 1744, while laboring carnesty, the epi it of persecution broke forth against Wesler. A great change apread through Eng and. But fuero ment a small congregation of Methodist preactars beseath the old towers, where, during the excita-ment, clergymen could pray. Here then was another change, a mighty change, that must lead the way to sill greater changes of which Wesley, in the company of Whitile d. led the way, and re-yvals spread throughout the land.

vivals spread throughout the land. It was the paritanical power that saved the nation, The playing Christian soldiers were disbanded; but it was this disbanded army that kept up the religious z-al of the nation, and made it grow in strength and Christianity. It was the Paritan element, the true elengy-and men as Baxter, John Bunyan, and these other God Rearing men-that unsintened this all-pergadage Christianity, and brought the nation to the light of true nebleness and power.
