RISTORI AS "QUEEN ELIZABETH."

In her impersonation of this character, Risi rise to the very acme of histrionic excelco. She leaves us nothing to desire. Her own individuality is merged and lost in the strangely varied and singularly contradictory nature of England's greater queen. In this role Ristori is not Ristori; she stands before us the choleric, impetuous, vain, capricious daughter of Henry VIII. But in so faithfully portraying the faults and hereditary weaknesses of the true daughter of "bluff King Hal," Ristori's great genius never permits us to lose sight of that great masculine mind that for forty-four years swayed the English sceptre with a power regardless of the "Constitution," and an indomitable will, that made the boldest hearts in all the land sink abashed "in its rebuke."

We are carried back three entire centuries. The present passes from us ntierly. We live in an age gone by. With the compelling power of her great genius, Ristori leads us on. We are passive in the hands of this "enchantress" as she unfolds to our fascinated gaze the living, breathing kistory of the "great past !"

No subtle shade in the character of "Elizabeth" is forgotten. Now she stands before us trembling hand, the sword of the Eighth Benry, and hurling the scabbard from her, with her fingers on the paked blade, breathes the oath that annihilates Spain forever. Again she is all woman, coquetting with her favorite, the impetuous "Earl of Essex." We catch, anon, quick startling glimpses of the hidden woman's heart, that throbs, almost unconsciously to herself, with a deep, abiding, though unacknowledged love for the rash young Earl who "cast his all upon a die," and lost the stake. Ristori bears us on-we follow her-"Mary Stuart" is executed-we see "Elizabeth's" feigned grief and exulting heart-the Spanish Armada is dispersed-the conquering heroes return, "Howard," "Drake," "Essex"-the royal hand of the august Queen showers honors on all but the one most deeply loved-"Essex" is disgraced. Then follows a scene which baffles description. The injured and indignant Earl upraids his ungrateful mistress, and, blinded by rage, insults her in the presence of her entire court. With the unguarded fary that swayed her utterly when the spirit of Henry the Eighth rose highest in his daughter, "Elizabeth" strikes "Essex" on the cheek, and demands his sword. He casts it in broken fragments at her feet. Choking with grief and rage, she shricks out-"Al'a Torre! Alla Torre!"
(To the Tower! To the Tower!)

All is over, and he has given the death-blow to her love-all the deeper for the stern will that controls it-and sinks back overpowered with anguish and horror. No pen can do justice to Ristori's exquisite rendition of the conflicting emotions of this scene. Then follows the sharp and quick remorse. The yearning, hoping, watching agony, for "the ring" that shall restore to her her banished love. It comes not to her wish. Once more the demon pride triumphs over her better nature. She signs the death-warrant of the noble and unfortunate "Essex." The wild agony of eagerness to reach that fatal mandate, when "too late," was terrible to witness, and the curtain fell over the bold brow grovelling in the dust, and the proud form writhring in impotent and vain remorse.

When next "England's proud maiden Queen" ppears before us, it is when years and unavailgrief have swept all youth and glory from er brow.

A mortal sickness prevs upon her heart aulife. A canker gnaws within. Ristori gives us a worn, decrepit, querulous, replaing woman. Yet the iron will asserts itself still. She fight with death, and held her own to the last, Her Ministers implore her to name a successor. She rebels; drives them from her presence; she would be alone-alone to yield, unwatched, to her woman's heart, to her bodily weakness, to the 'terrers of her spectre-haunted soul! Alone she must die, unbeloved, unpitied, unwept! Then comes the bitter wails "Roberto ! Roberto ! decapitato per ordine mio!"

The malady conquers. At length, with un willing hand, she places the crown on the brow of the kneeling James the Sixth. The populace shout without, "Long live King James." In a transport of jealous fury, she snatches the diadem from the head of the awe-struck king. and placing it once more on her own worn, dishevelled locks, rears her emaciated form to its full he ght, and enunciates with all the old imperial pride, "Io sono Re ancora." But it is but the flame's last flash. The ghastly hues of death overspread the contracting features. The form sinks; the pale lips wail out, for the last time, the never-to-be-forgotten name, "Roberto," and England's greatest Queen is no more. Ristori's costumes in this character were as perfectly historical as her acting, never on any stage has such a wealth of gems lent its brilliance to adorn a genius that must forever outshine their highest splendor. Glacomo Gleck's rendition of "Essex" was worthy of great praise. In correct conception and earnestness of delivery he gave us a most life-like portrait of the "rash Essex."

WHO ARE THE "OLD POLES?" From the hills and the shores of the North,
The school-bouse, the church and the home.
Neath the standard or morals an i worth,
To the City or Penn they have come.
They come with the viol and voice,
With trumpet and larlone::
With chorus they heighten our joys—
They touch with their solemn quariette.

We list to a sweet warbling strain
As it charms every ear and each heart;
And is encored and encored again,
For no one would have it depart.
We hear toe full grandeur of sound
That swells from their union of power.
Melodious, high or profound,
To gladden instruct, or adore.

The hymn so descriptive and true,
Of the Christian's departure from ear.h:
And the grand Easter authem to show
His rising to anselic birth
Our country! her daughters and sons,
Her freedom and union, and right;
Her peop e, iar higher than thrones,
They sing in full songs of delight.

The patriot here may rejoice,
The Christian responsive admire.
Wille children with heart and with voice,
App and the sweets radias that inspire.
The tunes of our lathers are here,
For man and for Goodness Divine:
And words for reflection of cheer,
And welcomes to greet 'Auld Lang Syne.'

CITY INTELLIGENCE

[For Additional Local Items see Third Page.]

LARGENY OF CLOTHING .- Robert Alexander, colored, and Michael Levy, white, two men who drive oyster carts, and vend the bivalves around the city, stopped at a lager beer saleon at the corner of Eleventh and Cherry streets, and carried off an overcoat valued at forty dollars, the property of a countryman named George Rose, who had just bought it. Missing his property, he started after the two men and arrested them, and had them taken before Alderman Jones, who held them in $500 ball to answer.

A young man named S. R. Sperry, residing at No. 1752 North Tenth street, was robbed last evening. During the night his room-mate got up, dressed himself, and took an overcoat, valueat fifty dollars, and some three or four dollars from a vest pocket, the property of Sperry, and departed for parts unknown. This morning information of the fact, together with a descrip tion of the young man, was lodged at the Central Station, and the police are endeavoring to ferret RESCUING A PRISONER .- So frequent of late have attempts been made to resist officers in the execution of their duties, that it is almost a stereotyped narrative in the daily journals. The case we make note of to-day does not differ essentially from those that appear in the papers day after day, and will continue to do so until an effectual example is made of the offenders James C. Walley, who keeps an eating and drinking saloon in Eighth street, above Sansom, engaged with others, it is said, in resisting an arrest made by Officer Reeder last Tuesday afternoon.

Atter the officer had made the arrest, a crowd gathered around, and forced him and his pri-soner into the bar-room, and there succeeded in getting his prisoner separated. During the diturbance, Walley, it is said, drewoof to strike Reeder, and the latter took him into custody, and succeeded in conveying him to Alderman Hurley's office. After hearing the facts in the case, the Alderman held him in $500 bail to answer for assisting the prisoner to escape.

LEAVING STORES, ETC., OPEN.-Complaint is frequently made of the persistent carelessness of storekeepers and housekeepers, in leaving their places open after retiring. Besides being an incentive to robbery, and a loss to themstorekeepers and housekeepers, in leaving selves, it endangers the property of those ac joining, as it renders the place liable to the operations of incendiaries. There were quite a number of places found open last night in th Fifth District alone. A large shoe store, No. 1032 Locust street, was open at 2 o'clock this morning and a building at Broad and Walnut street, where there is a fair going on, was also found open. There were a number of others. When will the people learn to take care of their own property?

A FAIR IS NOW being held at the south-west corner of Ninth and Spring Garden stree's for the sale of useful and fancy articles, in aid of the Central Presbyterian Church, Northern Liberties. This time honored church seems to have outlived its congregation in its present ocation, Coates street, below Fourth, and this Fair is being held with a view to the erection of another editice in a location that will be more central to its present congregation. The collection of articles, we understand is large and varied, embracing many suited for Christmas gifts. We bespeak for them a liberal encour-

APPROPRIATING MONEY. - Joseph Cannon. living at No. 2118 Tower street, was arrested this morning on a warrant issued on the oath of John Martin, who charges Candon with collecting bills in his name and appropriating the money to his own use. He had no authority to collect the bills for Martin, who keeps a game cellar on Market street. He was taken before Alderman Jones, who held him in $800 bail to FAST DRIVING .- I'wo men, named Lewis Rose and Isaiah Drapers, both colored, were yesterday afternoon before Alderman Jones for reckless driving. They drove a huckster cart over an old gentleman at the corner of E gath and Race strects, injuring him slightly. James Cameron saw the affair and made the arrest. They were each held in $500 bail.

FALL AND WINTER OVERCOATS IN GREAT VARIETY.

ESPIONAGE-A GENERAL SYSTEM FOR THE DETECTION OF CRIME.—Any one who is tamiliar with the manners and customs of the Old World, would realily understand the workings of the great private detective system that is being carried out in this country at the pre-cent time. It has not long been started, but in the short time it has been in operation, it has done a great amount of good. The great centre of the whole system is in Chicago, which has ramifications all over the country in the different cities. Although it has not attained to the terrible proficiency of the European systems, set it is very accurate and certain in its workings.

A bank is defrauded in some mysterious miss. ner. The cashier or the directors can see that there has been fraud somewhere, but the traces of the crime are so covered up that no cert do clue can be gathered that will lead to the solution of the mystery. It is something out of the one of business of the regular detective, and the private detective is called in. A man is employed who is unknown to be a spy of the concern, and the steps of the suspected man are dogged. He makes the acquaintance of a supposed friend. They become bosom friends and companions. The midnight reveiry, the sly visit to the gambling saloca, or to worse places even than that, are attended with his shadow. All his incoming and outgoings are noted. His habits, even his thoughts, come under the same vigilant, unceasing surveillance. At last every little circomstance is connected together by a chain of association that fastens the guilt man the more wretch with a me pretended friend and bosom

It is so in every walk of life. An employer has a clerk, perhaps, whom he trusts with money and valuable papers. He cies he sees something erratic in his clerk' manners, but can fasten no charge upon him As yet the cash account is all correct. The ing coubt or suspicion haunts his mind. The only way to settle it is to employ a detective to watch all the movements, habits, and associations of the suspected party until all his movements are made clear as day, and his innocence established, without submitting him to the mor-tification of knowing anything of his employer's

In the prosecution of these researches, there may often be chances for abuse of privileges. There may be a leading a-tray of the victim under a pretense of finding out his habits. But the rules that are given for the guidance of the officers of the Company in the discharge of their duties are very explicit on this point. No one is allowed to entice the party he is employed to watch to drink, or to enter into un-lawful places. He is supposed rather to pursue the opposite plan, and to give credit for all that is good as well as for the bad actions.

The system has been pretty thoroughly tested, and found to work very well. A case of knocking down on one of our railroads was pursued for months, until, at last, success attended the efforts of the detectives, and the guilty parties were brought to justice.

SAD CASE OF DESTITUTION .- Several days ago a protessional thief and bummeress named Dillon was arrested and sent below on a charge of stealing some shoes. On lucsday Officer Reeder went to the place where she resided, in Mahlon street, near Mulberry alley. The house was a tumble-down affair, and the room occupied by the Diltons was a wretched place, as the weather was, there was not a particle of fire in the room. There were no articles of fur-niture, except, if it might be called by such a name, a thing that had once been a straw bed; but the ticking had long ago been rent away, and nothing but the dirty straw remained. It had by long use been matted down until it was as hard as a board, and tenacious as cloth. In this place were two little children, James and Theresa Dillon, the family of the wretened thief referred to above. These little things, the lad ten years, and the girl only four years old, were happy and contented in the very midst or such squalor and with. As the officer entered their miserable abode, they were singing as garty as it reposing on a bed of down. They were taken in charge, and the boy James sent to the St. John's, and the girl Theresa to the St. Joseph's Hospital. There they will be better cared for.

SLIGHT FIRE.-About a quarter past 6 o'clock last evening an alarm of fire was raised, which proved to be a slight fire in the flour store of Frederick Moss, at the northwest corner of Green and Franklin streets. The amount of damage was but trifling, as the flames were headway. As ye the cause of the fire is unknown.

OWNER WANTED .- An owner is wanted for five or six soldiers' overcoats and one horse-blanket, which are supposed to bave been stolen. The owner can recover them by applying to Lieutenant Connelly, at the Fifth District Station House. The above were taken from a negro who was arrested and committed several days ago on a charge of larceny.

Commissioner of Patents as follows:-Q Are you acquained with Sewing Machines for family use, how long have you been so acquainted, and what is the nature and extent of your acquaintance with them? A. Yes; for the last nine or ten years I have examined various machines, and have seen them in use, and have for the last nine years used a machine in my own family.

Q As the result of your observation and experience, what machine do you think best as a general amily instrument?

A. The Grover & Baker, decidedly.
Q. State the reasons, such of them as occur to for this opinion. A. I think the statch is a s ronger statch than that of any other machine I have seen used, and it seems to me much more simple in its management than other pachines. One great advantage is the ease vith which the seam is ripped when necessary to do so, and I think the work, by an inexperienced per on on a Grover & Baker Machine is better than the work of such person on any o her machine. It requires more still to work other machines than the Grover & Baker
