REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS. T. B. PETERSON & BROTHERS, No. 306 Chesnut

The approach of the holidays, and with them the giving of fine presents to relatives and friends, has infused new energy into the veins of the publishers of our city, and each are striving to excel the other in the neatness and variety of the books displayed upon their shelves. Prominent among those exhibiting the most enterprise, and standing unsurpassed by any and equatled by none, is the house of T. B. Peterson & Brothers. A resort to their spacious emporium, at No. 306 Chesnut street, will convince any One that our praise is well deserved. For years this house has been noted for the energy it displays on all occasions, but this year it has surpassed itself. To giance at the stock in detail. to look down the long shelves of works of every class, comprising all "from grave to gay," would be a task far too onerous to be attempted. We can divide their collection into their own publications and those for which they are the agents. Foremost among their own publications stand the works of Dickens. In twenty different dresses the productions of the great novelist stand forth. We see them in the most choice paper backs, which can be purchased by the poorest, and, further on, an antique and morocco edition which would grace the library of the richest in the land. The sets are all uniform, and form a most appropriate Christmas gift. We can imagine none more satisfactory that one of the elearly printed, handsomely bound sets of the works of Charles Dickens. Then we see the works of Dumas, with the peerless "Monte christo," and the absorbing series opening with the "Three Guardsmen." All of these are bound in cloth, and issued in a shape most ac-

Leaving the standard novelists, let us look at the poets. Here is Byron, in the finest binding; and Shelley, in a costly shape; Scott, beautifully illustrated, is represented by splendid editions of both the "Waverley Novels" and the Poetical Works; while Shakespeare and Milton, Cow per, Moore, and Tennyson, are attired in a man ner worthy of their mighty intellects. Coleridge, Chatterton, Longfellow, Whittier, and -but why mention names ?- all of the authors of fame are found upon their shelves, and in a style suited for every taste. The whole reading world is familiar with the regular form of Petersons' novels, and in the department devoted to Mrs. Stephens, Wood, Southworth, and the other native authoresses, are found innumerable novels, the names of which are known throughout the land. There is nothing in the way of literature which the public would naturally demand which cannot be supplied from the spacious rooms of Messrs, Peterson. If, however, a unique taste should demand a work too rare to be on hand, by an admirable system of agencies it can be procured for the purchaser with the utmost despatch. All foreign standard works are on hand, and every demand can be promptly and satisfactorily met. To purchasers of presents, we recommend a visit to No. 306 Chesnut street, before a selection be made.

THE BRIDE OF LLEWELLYN, By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth, T. B. Peterson & Brothers. This last of Mrs. Southworth's productions commends itself principally because of the natural case with which the story is told. It requires a master-hand to make conversations appear not stilled, nor yet flippant. In the work before us, the authoress succeeds in this difficult art. Again, the tale itself is interesting and exciting. It is strange, yet not improbable. It is graphic in its descriptions, and fully sustains the high and wide-spread reputation of Mrs. Southworth as a woman of real genius. We doubt not but that the work will have, as its merits deserve, an extensive sale. It is published in the usual neat style of the Petersons.

-We have received from T. B. Peterson & Brothers a copy of the Texas Almanac, with a large new map, for which they are the agents, It treats of subjects unfamiliar to our citizens, and will be devoted to the interests of the Lone Star State, Price $1:50.

LOSSING'S HOME OF WASHINGTON,-The firm of Petersons also have the agency for Lossing's magnificently illustrated work, the "Home of Washington," than which a more appropriate Christmas gift cannot be selected. It is rich in its edition, and a typographical perfection.

PLEASURES OF THE FRENCH COURT. Paris, December 5 .- The court has quitted St. Cloud for its usual autumn sojourn at Complegne, for which favorite scene of hunting and gayety the first "batch" of guests leave Paris to-day. All those who are thus chosen to share the Imperial hospitality are notified, by the card of invitation, of the day and hour at which they must be at the railway station, where a special train awaits them, and conveys themselves, their luggage, and their servants to the Imperial chateau. Received by the major domo on their arrival in the vestibule of the palace, they are shown, on a large map of the house, hung on the wall, the rooms which each will occupy during his stay, and are then shown to their respective quarters by tall tootmen of the blandest manners, and arrayed in the green and gold of the Imperial livery. Three rooms, forming parlor, bedroom, and dressing-room, are allotted to each guest, these rooms being models of elegant comfort. On reaching their quarters this evening the guests will find bright fires burning, lamps lighted, and every convenience ready to their hand. Their baggage and their own servants will speedily make their appearance, and they will just have time to dress and make themselves thoroughly comfortable before they are summoned to descend for dinner. A servant of the palace will take the orders of each guest in regard to the materials of next morning's "little breakfast," and the hour at which it shall be served; and shortly afterwards each guest will obey the summons to descend to the large

The brilliant gathering of ministers, mar-shals, diplomats, and notorieties of the aristo-cratic, financial, literary, and scientific worlds, with their respective wives, all in full dre s, being duly assembled, a chamberlain throws open a door communicating with the Imperial bouldoir and announces their Majesties, who thereupon enter the room arm-in-arm, and make the tour of the company, welcoming each person with a few words of easy greeting. They then pass on into the dining-room, take their places in the centre of the oval table, followed by the guests, who seat them-selves under the auspices of the servants, all in the order indicated by cards laid on each plate. Beside each plate is a bill of fare, printed on satin; and the dinner is, of course, such a repast as a lover of his kind, improving on the famous wish of Henri IV, might desire to see the rest of humanity sit down to daily. As both Emperor and Empress shine in the dispensing of elegant hospitality, divested of the stiffness of official etiquette, which especially marks their receptions at Fontainbleau and at Compiegne, and talk freely with those whom they receive at their table, these dinners are as animated and agreeable as they are elegant and recherche. After din-ner their Majesties, on rising from the lable, pass into the great drawing room, ag in fol-lowed by their guests. The Empress gene-rally seats herself in a favorite arm-chair, the lady guests grouping themselves about her. The gentlemen talk to the ladies, or form little groups among themselves; and the Emperor moves slowly about the room, going from group to group, listening to what is being said in each, and often joining in any conversation that happens to be going forward. Coffee is handed round by splendid "Mercuries," and the company becomes gradually more and more animated.

These evening gatherings are often varied by games of various kinds, music, the acting of charades, and even the getting up of plays in which the various parts are taken by the guests. Some of these entertainments are extremely splendid; all the resources of chemistry, upholstery, jewelry, and millinery being pressed into the service of the whim of the moment.

The mornings are passed by the guests as they please, some remaining quietly in their rooms, others passing them in the magnificent library; others, again, riding, driving, walking, or visiting one another in their respective apartments. At a quarter before twelve all, in elegant morning toilette, gather in the parlor, where they are joined by their Majesties, who, after dispensing their salutations to each guest as they do before dinner, lead the way, in a similar style, to a defeuner a la fourchette, as perfect in itself as the more sumptuous evening meal. The Emperor is always hard at work up to the bour of lunch, but when not too busy with State affairs generally spends the after-noon out of doors. There are hunting and shooting, long excursions in the forest, visits to neighboring sites of interest, and whenever a grand bunt has taken place the curious scene of the curee—picturesque but horrible—is enacted in the great Court of Honor. On these occasions the Emperor's hounds, each held in leash by a valet wearing the gay livery of the Imperial hunt, are ranged in a vast circle round the court. Behind each valet stands a second valet holding aloft a lighted torch, and behind this circle of flame is a dense crowd composed of the host of servants and employes belonging to the Imperial household. The Emperor and Empress, with their guests in their splendid dress, assemble in the balconies and gatleries that overhang the court, the dark mass of the palace, with its lighted windows and the tops of the trees dimly seen against the sky, making up a scene of lights and shadows that would delight the hearts of the old Flemish ainters. At a signal from the Emperor, the hounds are suddenly loosed, and spring with yells of savage delight upon their prey, which they tear to pieces and devour, literally, in the twinkling of an eye. The ordinary curee, in which the stag set apart for the dogs' repast has been killed in the course of the day's hunt, is called the curee froide. The curee chaude, in which the hapless stag, captured, but not killed, chained to a stake in the middle of the court, is devoured alive by the hounds, is reserved for the visit of a crowned

The only occasion when this hideous relic of barbarcus times has been recussitated during the present reign is said to have been during the visit of the King of Prussia to Fontainebleau. The evidence of the appetite for horrors which this abominable custom presupposes in wearers of diadems, crops up here now and then not only among the uneducated masses, but among those who might be expected to have reached a higher phase of development. Think of a father, holding high rank in the French army, an educated, clever, and amiable man, taking his young daughter, a tew days ago, to the Morgue to witness the sad and revolting display of the dead bodies of people who have died by accident, and who, having nothing about them to show their identity, are kept there by the police until claimed by their friends. After such a proof of depraved taste on the part of persons moving in a superior walk of life, it seems natural enough that the two most popular amusements of the day, at this present writing, in this brilliant city, are the ghastly figure of a murdered woman so cunningly imitated in wax that it passes with the crowd for being a real corpse, as the exhibitor impudently proclaims it to be, and a similar horror declared to be "the head of a guillotined Kentuckian," which is made to roll its eyes and to talk, by means, it is supposed, of electrifled wires and a hidden ventriloquist.

Another Scare Over the Border-The Fenians Marching on Canada.

To the New York Associated Press. Sweetsburg, December 18 .- Much excitement was created in this viliage to-day, an alarm having been given that the Fenianz were coming to rescue the prisoners. The volunteers immediately got under arms, and the whole force has gone out to mest the enemy.

Confederate Gold Turned Over to the United States.—The Secretary of the Treasury has re-ceived a certificate of deposit in favor of Mr. Henry Merrill, for the sum of four hundred pounds sterling, on the London and County Banking Company, London, which sum Mr. Merrill reports remained in his hands, while acting as an officer of the so-called Confederate States of America, at the time of the suppression of the Rebellion. The Secretary has ordered that the necessary steps be taken for the recovery of the money, and when realized to be placed with the funds arising from the sales of captured and abandoned property.

-Blondin expects to do well in Ireland, whore there is much sympathy with those who put their necks in peril.

-It is stated that the magnificent school fund of Wisconsin has disappeared, and has no existence except as an accountant's fiction. -There is a gang of villains in New Orleans who kidnap little children on the streets, and then obtain a reward by returning them.
