"The Sick Man of Europe." THE failure of the Porte to crush a handful of Christians at Crete, and the fact that the rebellion, at first commencing with a warcloud the size of a man's hand, is rapidly spreading throughout all of the islands of the Archipelago, and will probably extend through many of the inland provinces of the Empire, have directed attention once more to the prospects of the Ottoman power. Fifty years ago Henry Hallam wrote:-"In the present day we anticipate, with an assurance which none can deem extravagant, the approaching subversion of the Ottoman power; but the signs of internal weakness have not yet been confirmed by the dismemberment of provinces; and the arch of dominion that long since has seemed nodding to its fall, and totters at every blast from the north, still rests upon the landmarks of ancient conquest, and spans the ample regions from Bagdad to Belgrade."

For half a century this Government, whose fall was anticipated so long ago, has held together by the force of cohesion, and it seems reserved for the middle of the nineteenth century to witness its overthrow. So far as Turkey is concerned, it would, indeed, seem that history repeats itself. The records of the Mahommedan power divide themselves into two distinct periods, which are strikingly analogous to each other. From the death of the Prophet, early in the seventh century, to the commencement of the fourteeath, is the first era, characterized by wonderful vitality in the beginning, with a remarkable development of energy and courage as the introduction. This cycle of conquest was followed by a stagnation, in which the Empire seemed colossal, and was preparing for other and far greater glories. And when all Europe was trembling at its power and fearing an invasion, this mighty structure crumbled to atoms with a rapidity without precedent, so that, while Christendom yet gazed with awe on the pile, it sunk out of sight, like one of those magical transformations with which Oriental tales abound. Province after province fell off, and of the vast Empire nothing was left but the capital of the Sultans of Gazna.

With the irruption of a new tribe of Tartary began the second era of the Porte. Once more was it renowned for conquest, for courage and ability. Once more it rose in power to be among the great nations of the earth. Then came the same period of stagnation-a period which Hallam anticipated would have ended half a century ago. The sign of decay was to be the dismemberment of provinces, and until the present day no symptom of dissolution was apparent. The insurrection in Crete is the first determined attempt to which there seemed to be a prospect of success. If the Christian Rebels succeed, their example will be followed by other and more powerful principalities which now own the Sultan's power. We will see the Porte once more fall into atoms; and once destroyed, no tribe of barbarians can appear to re-erect the edifice of superstition and sensualism.

Under such circumstances, a double argument in favor of aiding the Cretans is laid before all Christian nations. Not only does their heroism, the oppressions to which they have been subjected, and the common cause of religion, call on us to give them actual assistance but the fact that, by securing them victory, we are tending to overthrow the great bulwark of opposition to Christianity, demands that we supply them with the means of continuing the struggle. From the days of Hallam until now, the "sick man of Europe" has occupied the attention of the other great powers. With an aspiring rival in the north, and with enemies in its own provinces, while Greece stands filled with hatred to the West, it has only been the interference of the still more western Governments that has saved the Sultan from destruction. That Russia still views with ill-concealed longing the fair plains now held by the Porte, is attested by the fair in ald of the Cretans, at St. Petersburg, over which the two brothers of the Czar presided; and that but a fitting opportunity is needed to secure intervention none can doubt. The case of "the sick man" is indeed critical, and will shortly be settled-we anticipate by the invalid's death.

That the prospects of war are growing day by day more probable, is shown by the letter to yesterday's Tribune, Written (if report speaks truly) from the American Embassy at Constantinople. And war means the destruction of the Porte. The letter says :-

"The Cretan Rebellion is as active as ever; the losses of the Turks and Egyptians there amounting to some 20,000 men, and private advices from sure sources say that the rebellion is stronger and the Turks weaker than three months ago. In Thessaly and Epirus the revolution has already advanced too far to be repressed without bloodshed, or to be abandoned by the Greeks. With the Sultan and half his ministers burning for war, with a Greek Ministry pledged to take nothing short of the annexation of Crete, with Russia quietly urging on the Greeks, with England half inclined to encourage them too, is it probable that war can be avoided? The Greeks are also trying to stir up an excitement here. Placards were yesterday posted through the city to the effect that the Turks were collecting arms and ammunition in the mosques for a massacre of the Christians.

The distress of the Turkish Government for want of money is great. The expenses of the Cretan war have not only esten up everything which there was in the Treasury, but everything which the Turks can borrow. The January interest on the national debthas been paid but nothing else is paid, and the distress among the employes of the Porte, and through them among the small merchants, is heart-rending. Women and children in crowds surround the Treasury Department, and the Minister of Finance does not dare to show himself lest he should be stoned. No one is paid who by any possibility can be avoided or compelled to wait. If Innies does not declars war it will be be-If Turkey does not declare war, it will be be-cause she cannot raise the money to carry it on."

An Important Decision Affecting the Rights of Travellers upon Railroads. An important case, affecting the rights of travellers upon railroads, has just been decided in the Supreme Court in New York city. The case was that of Dorothea Rawson vs. the Pennsylvania Kailroad Company. The plaintiff brought an action to recover the value of trunks containing clothing and jewelry, lost on the rallroad of defendants, through their alleged carelessness. The plaintiff, at Massillon, Ohio, paid her fare from there through to New York, and received several tickets over different lines of railways (including the defendants'), as evidence that she had paid her fare. Upon one of the tickets was the following notice:-

"This ticket entitles the holder to not over eighty pounds baggage free, and not at a rate ex-ceeding in value $100, unless notice is given, and an extra amount paid at double first-class freight rates. No road represented by either of these tickets is responsible for the passenger or baggage while upon any other road."

The trunks were burnt in consequence of an accident near Thomaston. The defendants set up that the property lost having in good part been received from her husband, it remained his under the common law, and he should have been plaintiff, and the wife could not recover on her own suit. They also claim that the amount and character of the baggage was such as to render the imposition of its sale carriage upon the Company as common carriers unreasonable. And, finally, they claim that the Company could restrict its liability by agreement, in the shape of regulations printed on tickets and specially

The Court decided that the plaintiff could maintain her action even though the property in question was the gift of her husband; and, secondly, that a railroad company may limit its liability as a common carrier "by positive contract, the owner of the goods or the passenger voluntarily, for a valuable consideration, waiving his right to indemnity, but they cannot do so by any notice placed on a ticket, or elsewhere, even where such notice is brought to the knowledge of those whose persons or whose property they undertake to carry;" and, finally, that "the kind and quantity of the materials constituting the baggage of the traveller must depend upon his tastes and habits and his pecuniary circumstances, his position in society, and, it might be added, the conveniences and necessities of the particular journey," and is a proper question for

The result of the decision was the confirmation of the verdict of the Court below? giving Mrs. Rawson $3995.10 as damages for the loss of her trunks.

The Bankrupt Bill.

THE Bankrupt bill was defeated in the Senate vesterday by a close vote. Pending a motion to reconsider the vote, the Senate adjourned. The fate of the bill is extremely doubtful.

"THE ROONEYS."-We have read with great amusement the little epic published by the 'American News Company," entitled "The Rooneys." It is incomparably the best satire we have recently seen. As a biting sarcasm on the "mushroom" aristocracy of America, it cannot fail to do good. It is elegantly illustrated with appropriate engravings, and makes as neat and acceptable a volume to all lovers of the comical as any which has issued from our native press for years. It is for sale by T. B. Peterson & Bros., No. 306 Chesnut

AN ADMIRABLE WEEKLY,-We are glad to see that the New York Nation is prospering. It is a journal started on the basis of independence of thought, and adherence to no party in any measure to which it cannot give its conscientious support. The articles are all carefully matured, and have none of those faults which characterize those of some more pretentious weeklies. It stands in New York without a rival, and contains many of the excellencies of the British periodicals, with a strength and vigor which are not exhibited by its contemporaries across the water.

Court of Common Pleas—Judge Brewster.

—Peal vs. Otto. An action to recover for alleged medical services. Defense, that the services were not rendered. On trial.

District Court—Judge Sharswood.—Charles Spring vs. Christian Nobling. An action to recover damages sustained by plaintiff in having been gored by a vicious ox belonging to defendant. Last spring the detendant was driving an ox through the city, when the beast, at Fifth street and Girard avenue, broke loose and attacked plaintiff. Defense, that the ownership of the ox was not in defendant, and, if it had of the ox was not in defendant, and, if it had been, he was not liable, not knowing the vicious disposition of the animal. Nist Prius—Judge Agnew.—Charles M.

Griffiths and Mary E. Griffiths; in right of the said Mary E. Griffiths, vs. The Philadelphia, Germantown, and Norristown Raliroad Company, An action to recover damages against the defondants for injury received in consequence of a collision between a damages against the defendants for injury received in consequence of a collision between a train of defendants and the carriage of plaintiffs, through the alleged neglect of the engineer of the train. On the afternoon of February 24, 1865, plaintiffs were driving along Tenth street, and hearing no whistle of an engine, attempted to cross the railroad track, but before getting clear of the track the 3 o'clock train from Germantown ran into the carriage, completely demolishing the vehicle and breaking Mrs. Griffiths' collar bone, and inflicting a severe cut on the head of a Miss Matthews, one of the inmates of the carriage.

The defense alleged that this accident was caused not by any neglect on the part of the engineer, but by the careloss temerity of the plaintiffs. The steam of the down trains is always cut off at Broad street, and not used in coming into the city; the trains coming at the rate of ten or twelve miles per hour. On this occasion steam was cut off at Broad street, and the whistle, a very lond one, was used before coming to Tenth street. The bell is never sounded before reaching Columbia avenue. The steam was reversed as soon as plaintiffs were seen. When the train reached Tenth street the carriage was across the track, except one hind wheel. Parties at the crossing of Tenth street have a clear view up to Turner's lane. On trial, Irish Lands.-Lord Dufferin writes to the London News:-"Five-and-twenty years ago the area of uncultivated land in all Ireland only unted to six million three hundred thousand, and at this moment there are only about million of acres in that condition. these four million, two million and a hall consist of bog and mountain land, so barren as to be reported by Sir R. Griffiths unfit even for pasture; so that instead of there being seven illion of acres of waste land to be improved, as has been stated, there only remain about a million and a half improvable even for pasture.

MEDICAL BLECTRICITY. Latest and Most Important Discoveries in the Treatment of Chronic

DR. S. W. BECK WITH'S

ELECTRICAL INSTITUTE.

No. 1990 WALNUT ST.

During our investigations in the treatment of disease in its various forms by the agency of electricity, we have obtained very many valuable and startling facts, which, saded to the previous though limited information, possessed by other and less fortunate operators, place us beyond all previous knowledge of this mysterious agent. During the course of our practice we have treated and oured, through the knowledge thus gained, many thousands, and by means of our new discoveries have established ourselves as the most successful Medical Electricians in this country or Europe.

Electrical investigation has proved that the human body acts on the principle of the galvanic battery. The brain, mucous and serous membranes, the skin tissues, and fluids constitute the negative and post tive torces, and every action, whether mental or physical, is the result of these antagonistic forces. Digestion, respiration, circulation, secretion, and excretion are due soiely to electrical influence. There is a polar action established throughout the nervous system which connects with every part of the body, establishing and preserving a proper balance of the electrical element which constitutes health, and a disturbance of which causes disease. There are strictly but two conditions of diseaseone of inflammation, or positive; the other weak. debilitated, negative-and as electricity contains these two conditions in the action of the positive and negative currents, all we have to do is to neutralize the disease and restore proper, healthy

Among the chronic diseases in which electricity has been, and is daily being by our agency, of the greatest utility, a cure being rapidly effected after the fanure or all other means, are :-

1. Epilepsy, Chorea, or St. Vitus' Dance, Paralysis (Hemplegia), Neuralgia, Hysteria, Nervousness Falpitation of the Heart Lockjaw, etc. 2.
