The Increase of Crime-Its Causes and Remedies.

JUDGE LUDLOW, in his address to the Grand Jury last Monday, expressed the opinion that "a most fearful, determined struggle between right and wrong, virtue and vice, law and order, is now going on in this country; and unless the current of crime is instantly checked, it will soon, very soon, sweep away from the land all we consider good. For the first time in the history of the Eastern Penitentiary, every cell is crowded; and the saddest fact of all is that over two-thirds of the inmates are under twenty-five years of age!"

The mere fact that there are more convicts in the Penitentiary than ever before does not of itself necessarily prove that there are more than the ordinary proportion of criminals in the community. As the population of the city increases, the number of criminals is naturally larger, and the Penitentiary might in time come to be filled in that way alone. Or a more strict and rigorous administration of justice might result in the conviction of a larger proportion of criminals than usual, and so apparently increase their numbers. Unfortunately, however, we can hardly solace ourselves with any such explanations of the present phenomenon. The alarming increase of crime forces itself upon our view in too many ways, and from too many quarters, to allow of any doubt concerning its reality. And as Judge Ludlow well remarks, the saddest fact connected with it is the increase of crime among the young. This is something truly startling. It should arouse the earnest attention of every good citizen.

Doubtless much of the increase of crime is due to the demoralization incident to so great a war as the one through which we have just passed. It is a part of the general cost of the struggle forced upon us by those who attempted to lovertheow the Government. Such a result was to have been anticipatedand is perhaps less than we had reason to

There is something, too, in the present condition of the country which tends to produce an increase of certain classes of crimes in the Northern States. Since the close of the war we have received large accessions of thieves, pickpockets, robbers, and gamblers from the South. They abound in ail our large cities. They find a more profitable field of operations here than at home.

But there are other causes to which much of this increase of crime, especially among the young, is due. Judge Ludlow attributes it in part "to a want of proper training of our young men, and to the destruction of the apprentice system." They are restrained neither by parents nor masters. 'As soon as their day's work is over they are thrown en masse upon society; they resort to low dens of gambling and prostitution, become the companions of thieves and prostitutes, have no self-respect, and so hasten to their inevitable destruction."

There is much of truth in these suggestions. The overthrow of the apprentice system has worked badly in morals as well as in business. Under that system not only were young men taught to be good mechanics and citizens, but some care was taken of their habits and morals. Now they grow up into halt-taught workmen, mere bunglers in their traties, while increasing numbers of them go to swell the army of those who prey upon society by their vices, or become its open enemies by their crimes. There is also a lack of parental restraint which is disastrous in its consequences. Mere boys, who ought to be at home, are allowed to spend their evenings in wandering about the streets, forming evil associations and learning lessons of vice. And then, also, there are thousands of children victims of poverty and want, who really have no homes that are worthy of the name. It is from this class that the great army of criminals draws its never-failing supplies.

In protecting itself against crime, society must depend partly upon law and partly upon moral influences. When crime has been committed, the law should impose its penalty promptly and certainly. The lax administration of the criminal law is one of the chief causes of the prevalence of crime. The laws are good enough, their penalties severe enough, but their execution is feeble and uncertain. Criminais escape so constantly, through the connivance or indolence of the officers of the law, that the law loses all its terrors. It may well be questioned, too, whether the requirement of a unanimous verdiet of a jury to convict, is not far more of a defense for criminals than it is a protection of innocent persons. We believe that the best interests of society would be greatly subserved by such a change in our criminal law as should allow two-thirds or three-fourths of a jury to convict.

But our chief protection against crime must be in those influences which tend to prevent men from becoming criminals. This is a great subject, and one which demands far more attention than it has yet received.

There stands the grim evil of poverty contributing its constant quota to the ranks of vice and crime. How shall we reach that? How save the thousands of innocent children in our large cities, who seem doomed to lives of violence and shame?

There stands the great ovil of intemperance, with its seductions at every corner, the great teeder of the almshouse and the prison. How shall we reach that? How shall we keep the young from a temptation which so persistently assails them in every possible shape and form?

There is that terrible social evil of prostitution, which ministers are afraid to preach about, and which even the newspaper editor hardly knows how to mention. What is to be done with that? Everybody knows that it is fearfully on the increase. It no longer seeks concealment, but flaunts itself before the public eye. Its evil effects are striking further and deeper every day into the very vitals of society, and yet nothing is done to check it. It is a vast nursery of violent and deadly crimes, yet the law seems powerless to repress it.

So long as society allows these powerful and sleeplessly active influences of evil to riot unchecked, we must look for crime to increase. We may hang men for murder, but so long as we tolerate those huge vices that madden men's brains with poison and their hearts with lust, and their woole beings with passion, we must expect violence and murder to increase. To secure a decrease of crime, we must begin at the bottom, and work agains these vicious and destructive influences of which crime is only the natural and necessary

Protecting Iron-Clads from Destruction by Fire.

ALL the world has heard that the New Ironsides was destroyed by fire while lying at League Island, with scarcely the shadow of a guard, or watch; and all the world has since been told by the Connecticut delegation that League Island, on that account, is a very dangerous locality as a station for iron-clad vessels-of-war.

Now, be it known that New Orleans is also an iron-clad station in its way. But through some strange oversight of the gentleman from the "Wooden-nutmeg" State, the ironclads at New Orleans are partially, if not wholly, in commission. They are properly guarded from all chance of fire or other mishap by the presence of a large and efficient corps of naval officers and men. The consequence is that none of these iron-clads have fallen a prey to the incendiary. On the contrary, these ugly but expensive monsters were, on the evening of the 1st instant, the scene of a conflagration of quite a different character. On that occasion the deck of one of them was, to quote from the New Orleans Times of a late date, "canvassed over, and profusely decorated with flags of all nations, arms of every description, decorations without number, paintings, mirrors, orange trees, and a multitude of quaint and curious things, arranged in such a manner as to give the beholder a surprise as well as a rare treat."

When all this had been arranged, the ironclad saloon was lighted up by several hundred wax candles, by the light of which a festive throng of naval heroes and reconstructed Southern dames tripped "the light fantastic toe" until the break of day. We would call the attention of the naval committees of Congress to this little episode, at the same time propounding this query:-Would the New Ironsides be the wreck she now is, if she had been lavored with such a cheerful and efficient watch?

THE precise stage which the question of the Alabama claims has reached is indicated in Lord Derby's reply to a question put by Earl Russell in the House of Lords last Tuesday evening. The British Government, it appears, have at length agreed to submit the matter to arbitration, and await from the United States Government a plain statement of the points on which adjustment on that plan'is desired. This, we opine, there will be no difficulty in supplying.

AMUSEMENTS.

"DON PARQUALE."-This delightfully comic opera was well performed by the Richings Troupe-the artists entering into the spirit of the respective roles, and singing and acting them with spirit and effect Miss Richings was in splendld voice, and sang the florid music of her part with consummate ability and artistic finish. The part has never been as well sung at the Academy, or as conscientiously-not a bar of the music having been omitted-a gratifying feature, which the Italians would do well to imitate-Mr. Castle's "Serenade" was deliciously rendered and enthusiastically encored. The splendid quartette in the same act, and the fine duett by Miss Richings and Mr. Castie were also honored with well-merited encores, and were repeated to the great satisfaction of the audience. The "Doctor Malatesta" of Mr. Campbell was admirable, both vocally and histrionically. His noble voice was very effective in the concerted pieces, and his acting and by-play were judiclous and amusing. 'The poor "Don" found an able representative in Mr. Segulu, who acted out the misfortunes of "Pasquale" to perfection The singing of the part, however, was not as commendable, the music seeming to be too low, generally, for Mr. Se-guin's register. The orchestra, under Mr. Deitrich, was excellent, and the little the chorus had to do was acceptably accomplished. Altogether it was a delightful performance, and one highly enjoyed by the brilliaut

This evening, Miss Richings, the directress and prima fonno, takes a benefit, and appears as "Amina," in La Sonnambula, supported by Mesdames Arnold and Boudinot, and Mesars. Campbell, Castle, and Arnold, To-morrow (Saturday) afternoon there will be as operatic Matinee at the Academy, when Flotow's beautiful opera of Martha will be given complete, with a very effective cast. No opera on Saturday night. Next week The Rose Custils will be produced, with great attention to BENEFITS TO-NIGHT.—At the Chesnut, Mr. Barney Williams has a farewell benefit. The Sharesock and O'Finnigan and the Friries will both be played.

At the Walnut, Mr. Thomas J. Hemphill, the business manager, offers a very attractive bill, embracing H. Wigar's new connedy, called Bosom Friends, Papping the Question, and Nivethearts and Wives. Of course, it is only necessary to make this amouncement.

At the Arch, Mr. Fox. the great pantomimist, will "Speak a Piece," for the first time, on the occasion of his bonefit this evening. He appears as "Wormwood" in the Lottery Tieket, and as "The Clown," in his own beautiful pantomime of Juck and Gill. He will be assisted by his little brother, Mad ile Martinetti, Master Colligne, and the whole of the Arch Sireet Company.

MATERIES To Monnow. At the Chesnut, Mr. and Mrs. Bartier Williams will appear in The Shamrock. As the Arch, the tuird Fack and Gill matines will commence at 20 clock. At the American Theatre, Mr. Pox's Variety froupe will appear in an excellent entertainment, ommencing at 2 o'clock.

At the Academy-Martha,

GREMANIA.—The following is the programme for he concert at Musical Fund Hail to-morrow (Satur-lay) afternoon:— Overture, "Don Juan"...... Overture, "Don Juan"...... Song, "The Peasant Giri"... "Alpine Reses Walts"...... Adagio from First Sintonle.

"My Ideal Galop". ANOTHER NEW PANTONIME.—We learn that Mr. Robert Fraser, the popular pantonimist, has prepared an entirely new pantomime, which is to be produced by Carnerosa & Direy, in a short time, at their Opera House, Eleventh street, above Chasnut, Mr. Fraser will appear in it, and the scenery, tricks, dresses, and appointments will be new and attractive.

THE SONGS OF SCOTLAND.—Mr. Kenuedy, the delightful Scottish balladist, gives his last entertainment this evening, at the Assembly Buildings. His sources have been well attended, and have given the greatest pleasure to all who listened to him. He is the best Scottish balledist that ever visited this country. BENEFIT OF MR. J. B. ROBERTS.—This favorite Philadelphia tragedian will take a benefit at the Walnut Street Theaire to morrow (Saturday) evening. He has arranged an admirable entertainment for the occasion, and we doubt not that he will have a very large audience.

MUSICAL SOURES—This evening an excellent concert will be given at the Rev. Dr. Dale's Church, Race atreet, below Sixteenth, for the benefit of the Sabbath School of the church.

School of the church.

THE AULD FOLKS.—The Brother Jonathan Auld Folks make their first bow in Philadelphia at National Hall this evening. The programme embraces some capital selections.
