Is the Dead-Lock About to be Removed? THE speech of General Banks in the House of Representatives on Saturday, in opposition to the pending bill for the military reconstruction of the South, is worthy of particular notice in two particulars-first, in holding out the hope of a reconciliation between Congress and the Executive, and, secondly, in pointing to the final resort of impeachment if the present "dead-lock" between those two departments of the Government cannot be otherwise removed. His idea seems to be that a law fully equal to the necessities of the case may be passed, which shall either command the assent and co-operation of the Executive, or shall make a clear and indisputable case for impeachment,

It is needless to say that the country would gladly welcome a return to that practical co-operation between the Executive and Congress which the Constitution contemplates, and which the most vital necessities of the Government so imperiously demand. The difficulty hitherto has been that acting President Johnson has assumed that the work of reconstruction was un fait accompli; that his own action in reorganizing the late Rebel communities was final; and that Congress had nothing whatever to do in the premises except to admit Senators and Representatives from the so-called States which he has erected. So long as he maintains this position, it is evident that nothing can be done. The "dead-lock" is irrefragible, except by a resort to that supreme remedy which the Constitution has provided for just such extreme and perilous cases.

But it, as it is intimated, and as we hope may prove to be the case, the acting President has concluded to retreat from his untenable position, and to regard the whole question of reconstruction as an open one, to be decided by the constitutional lawmaking power in the Government, instead of by his own mere ipse dixit, then we see no insurmountable obstacles to the prompt and peaceful settlement of all our national difficulties. The only thing that has prevented the governmental machine from working smoothly on this question has been the anomalous and unconstitutional position of the acting Executive. There are no questions so difficult that the legitimate workings of our form of government will not solve them; but when one man attempts to set up his will as law, then the machine stops, and he must either get out of the way or be crushed by it. We shall be most happy to see the acting Executive remove the "deadlock" by ceasing to attempt the exercise of any but the constitutional functions of his office, leaving the great questions growing out of the late war to le settled by the constitutional law-making power of the Government. Such a course of conduct on his part will restore harmony and order to the Government, and will have the way for a happy exit from all our perils.

The Necessity of Good Manners at Concerts, Lectures, and Other Public

PROBABLY no person who attends our places of public instruction and amusement has escaped being annoyed by the impertinent whispering and talking of a class of people who infest such places, and who seem to delight not only in not listening themselves, but in preventing others from listening also. We know of no annoyance more rude, more thoroughly marking the ul-bred person, than this one, and yet we regret to say that the chief offenders of this sort are of the female sex. Not long since a lecturer of high character and position in our city was obliged to stop in the midst of an address, and inform the audience that he should feel compelled to terminate his remarks unless the incessant and disturbing conversation of a couple of young ladies (!) was stopped. The offense has become so general that it is a public

A lady correspondent, who is a cultivated musician, and whose experience of this impertinence has been so extensive as to stir her spirit to the point of public remonstrance, sends us the following appeal, which we gladly publish, and which we trust the frequenters of concerts and lectures will both read and heed :-

"I would willingly keep silent but that my heart is hot within me, and I make one more appeal to my fellow-auditors at concerts and lectures. Great are the abuses practised and permitted at all such entertainments; great are the sufferings of those who go to hear music or eloquence, and not promiseuous conversation, Afternoons and evenings are wasted, tempers are tried, piensures are turned into penances because a few (sometimes, atas! many) persons cannot remember that there is a time to be silent. Perhaps some illustrations may add force to the complaint. It seems to be to be supposed by ultitudes of young people that the rehearsals of the Germania Orchestra are occasions for more than usual freedom in talking and laughing, or even in lunching (for the last divertissement has been noticed). Now it is scarcely for this end that the sinfonies of Reethoven and the finest operatio gems are so carefully performed; and even if it were not an impertinence to the musiciaus, it may be that it is an annoyance to part of the andience; there are those who go to the 'Germania' to listen. I once heard three young ladies converse volubly during the whole performance of one of Schubert's songs, which they had themselves requested, as I heard them say. At one of the charming matinees that were given here by Mr. Otto Dresel, two years ago, a damael used much of the music as a running accompaniment to her own dissertations on the comparative merits of various planists; and the other evening, at the grand symphony concert in the Musical Fund Hall, not all the enthusiasm could totally prevent the usual grievance. Sometimes, it is true, it was only the expression of delight, and it may seem a hard thing to deter young Americans from the use of adjectives; but when we consider that a whisper is often andible at quite a distance. and that some of our most ecstatic adjectives contain the letter 's,' which it is difficult to speak softly, it may be believed that a very little talking will disturb the quietness of a room. Can any one imagine what the effect would be if every member of an audience of fifteen hundred persons should say six times in the course of an evening, 'Isn't this exquisite?' Yes, splendid!

"And yet, people who really love music sin constantly in this thing from want of thought, Probably it never occurs to them that their neightors would prefer making their own criticisms, and that, in fact, criticism and enjoyment are alike rendered impossible to all in the vicinity of these voluble auditors. Dear friends and fellow concert-goers, let us make some good resolutions:-First, not to speak, even with a note of admiration, during any performance, however long. Second, not to beat time, however accurate may be our perceptions—however vast our appreciation. Third, to recollect that those around us have rights of the brain and the ear, as well as of property usually so called. And fourth, to regard the ancient maxim with limitations, remembering that while 'silence is golden" speech is not invariably silvery, but may partake of baser metals to a metancholy degree. We may find even in concert-rooms space to do unto others as we would have others do unto us."

The Law of Bankruptcy.

THE Senate, by twenty-two to fourteen, reconsidered on Saturday the vote by which the Bankrupt bill was defeated a few days since, and the proposed law is once more before that body. We do not know what may be the fate reserved for it, but we think that the opposition which it has encountered must arise from some of the minor provisions rather than from antipathy to the main idea which it embodies. The cardinal aim of the bill is eminently just. It is to enable a man of business who has been unfortunate to once more regain his feet, and stand an equal among men. The law which would crush down and keep forever beyond the pale of hope an honest but unsuccessful merchant, is derived from the ancient Roman law, which allowed a creditor to imprison a debtor, and not only during his life to keep a hold on his labor, but his disability was hereditary, and the children might also be held in durance for their father's misjortunes. Gradually, however, civilization has ameliorated the condition of the debtor until, in this country, we have no such scenes as Dickens depicts in "Little Dorrit."

Our civilization has no such blot as that shown in the pages of the "Pickwick Papers." We yet, however, have on our statute books a provision watch tends to crush all hope and energy out of a debtor. His creditors can at any time seize any property which he may accumulate. By this means all incentive to rise is removed, and the man, once down, has no inducement to become an active member of society. The Bankrupt law should provide for his holding property which he may afterwards earn. For while one villain may avail himself of it to escape the proper penalty for fraud, three unfortunate but honest men will have new life infused into their action, and have an aim in their exertions to once more pass as equals among their fellows.

IF IT WAS a rule to bestow the richest offices in the gift of the Government on such men as Hon. George Bancroft, who, we are told, has been nominated as Collector of the Port of Beston, there would not be the sterm of indignation which has swept over the country whenever Presidential appointments are announced. The selection is one which will meet the warmest approval of the Boston community, and receive the ready confirmation of the Senate.
