Paris, January 25.—The Emperor Napoleon sent to the Prefecture hall, which was going on at the time, a special message contradicting the report.

Mr. Gladstone was in Paris, en route to London from Italy, and the Political Economy Society of France seized the occasion to tender him a banquet. It was to take place on the 26th of January.

As for the benefits resulting from the decree of Sunday, public opinion is very nearly the same as I have in previous numbers described. It is, then, a measure which may do much good, but may do little, and there is one great fact which they who approve and they who disapprove ought to bear in mind.

has made up his mind that certain friends of his own might now venture to propose to the Emperor Napoleon to abdicate in favor of the Emperor Napoleon III.

In the meantime the Emperor was maturing, in silence and secrecy, his plan of reform—not quite the same as that which has been published, though very nearly so.

Some one on looking around discovered the Constitution, with much the same sense of astonishment as that which we have already mentioned.

Now, Congress only asked, "Is it expedient?" But, in the judgment of the Executive, what was unconstitutional could not be expedient.

It was different when the Executive was in authority, and the Senate, then the candidate knew that he could secure a majority of that body, and he could venture to give his adhesion to the President.

It is a consistent part of the general system which we see before us, that the Executive frequently during the conversation the President reiterated his belief that the people would eventually begin to look at all the questions now before the President and the Cabinet.

There is an advantage to the advantage which American politicians do not appreciate, or hearing both sides of a question, and in these days the only efficient means of getting at the President's views is to read his opinions.

The States had brought Congress into existence, and it was the duty of the President to see that the original and elementary principle of its being, it was as if the creature turned round upon the creator, and attempted to destroy him.

Another Bonded Warehouse Robbed.

SEABLY EMBROIDERED THROBBER DOLLARS' WORTH OF GOODS STOLEN FROM THE GREAT PORTION OF THE PROPERTY FOUND IN A COOPERAGE—NO TRACE OF THE THIEVES.

Some time between last Saturday night and Monday morning the extensive United States bonded warehouse of Messrs. Miller & Conger, located at the corner of Water and Union streets, was visited by a gang of bold and expert burglars, who succeeded in robbing the place of a large quantity of silk and satin goods and jewelry.

It is supposed that the robbery was committed during Saturday night, as a robber in the employ of the firm was in the store during the afternoon, and did not notice anything unusual about the place.

From a subsequent examination of the premises, it appears that the burglars passed through an open lot connected with Brigg's coopers immediately in the rear of the warehouse, and entered the place by the back.

A similar door a little further on was then forced open, and the burglars, of whom it was supposed there were at least three, entered the warehouse. They ascended to the fifth floor, where they burst open twenty cases and sacks of goods, containing silks, satins, linens, poplins, cloths, etc., etc., and ransacked them thoroughly.

Selecting three cases of elegant goods, being a portion of a consignment to Messrs. A. T. Stewart & Co., the burglars emptied some fifteen or twenty bags of rice, strewn the contents about the floor. The bags were then filled with the costly goods taken from the cases, a valuable quantity of jewelry, which the thieves found in a box belonging to a brother-in-law of Mr. Miller, which had been left on storage in the establishment.

The burglars then divested themselves of their underclothing, and donned new clothes, which they found in one of the cases which they had broken open. The burglars, with surprising coolness, then regarded themselves with mirrors, liquors, and cigars, and must have enjoyed themselves immensely, judging from the numerous empty bottles and stumps of cigars found lying about the floor.

After cursing to their hearts' content, the burglars left the premises under the cover of darkness, with the goods amounting in value to between $12,000 and $15,000. Yesterday morning the workmen at Bragg's coopers found three bags of the goods, valued at $2000, lying among the costly goods taken from the cases, which the burglars were probably compelled to abandon in their flight.

How so much property could be removed from the building at night without attracting the attention of the police, seems inexplicable. Captain Jameson, of the Seventh Precinct, was notified of the robbery, and made a thorough examination of the premises. No trace of the thieves or the property has yet been obtained.
