SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1867.

Ireland's Hour Not Yet Come.

We have no idea that the Fenian revolt in Ireland can be successful. The odds against the revolutionists are too great. The Government possesses an abundance of means for the suppression of rebellion, and is thoroughly aroused. The Fenians, on the other hand, it is apparent, are poorly organized, and are unable to act with that promptness and concentration of effort which are necessary to success. So far, therefore, as accomplishing any great results at the present time are concerned, the movement must end in failure.

In a more comprehensive view this irrepressible Fenian trouble is of importance. When we consider the wide-spread dissatisfaction that prevails throughout Great Britain on the part of the masses, on account of their political disfranchisement; when we behold the distress of her laboring classes; when we read the ominous speeches of Mr. Bright, pointing to the final remedy of revolution, nnless the Government shall enter upon a course or a form that is utterly hated by the aristocancy, we can well understand how the Fenian movement may yet become one of vast moment. As a part of a general uprising to overthrow the present corrupt and oppressive Government of Great Britain, the revolt of the Irish would become an element of great infinence. Put down for the present the Fenians probably will be, but their suppression will do nothing towards removing those radical and deep-seated causes which give the movement a vitality that prison doors and scales a cannot extinguish. The hatred of Rngtish oppression will remain. The love of Irish liberty will grow more bright. And in some hour of England's extremity, possibly not my distant, the Fenians may strike a blow for in. , endence that there shall be no power

· How to Make Bank Officers Honest.

It is sound wisdom to profit by the experience of others, and it is natural for a young people, with new institutions, new wants, and vague ideas in regard to their gratification, to turn to the precedents of older nations and see how they manage their affairs. It is not servile imitation when we draw liberally on the policy of Great Britain. It is only acting like wise statesmen, and availing ourselves of the opinions and lessons of others. It was this spirit which led the founders of our Government to take so many of the British notions into our new political structure; and sound discretion should induce us to use the lessons o' he past of the mother country whenever ve can. She has had a long experience in the conduct of a banking system, and has been, for a century and a half, perfecting the best plan of securing honest officials. We then turn to the rules in vogue in the Bank of England to-day, and recommend the adoption of a like series in our own National Banks. That some reform is needed we suppose all will agree. Within the past week no less than six associations, started under the National Banking act, have exploded because of the dishonesty of their officers. In one, a President commences a series of immense speculations, and involves the bank. In another, a Cashier does likewise. And in yet another, a confidential Clerk ditto, and so on to all the Directors and employés. These cases have come to light; how many more may be hereafter revealed can be known to none.

It is well for us to ask why it is that the funds are so exposed, and why, with such certainty of detection staring them in the face, men will throw away their good name with such recklessness. The cause is not found in the fact that they have not funds sufficient to meet their immediate wants, for their salaries are enough to keep them from want and to meet all necessary expenses. We think that these defalcations were occasioned by a desire to secure a competency for their old age, and to remove the future of want away from the prospect of their active life. Their needs made them spend all they received each year, in order that they might keep up a proper appearance. They had no surplus to lay aside and accumulate, to provide for the day when age would no longer let them work. To gain this sum they risked in a dozen ventures and lost. To cover up this one defalcation an additional series of similar dishonesties was necessary, so that, after years of crime, they are discovered, and have eventually no more money than when they first began the career of guilt.

How, then, is this to be remedied? We answer, by removing the inducement-by placing such a sum in prospect as will dispel all fears of future want. This is the plan which has been acted upon in the Bank of England for years. Every cashier or clerk who has served the institution faithfully for a certain number of years, is, when he arrives at old age, placed upon half-pay, and this gives enough to support him. By this plan an inducement is held out to continued honesty; for, if any misdemeanor is committed, he may be discharged before the time of receiving his retiring pay arrives; while, if he does his duty for that time, he is safe from all fear of all future want. At the same time no sense of degradation is caused by this pecuniary aid, for it is not a charity, but a payment for services rendered, as the half-pay official still does certain duties which earn his pay. The army or naval officer feels no dependence when placed on the retired list, and the same process applies to the bank officers as to those in the service.

This plan having been tried in England and found to work admirably, and all other plans having failed here, we earnestly commend to the directors of the National Banks the idea of providing for the old age of their officials. The expense will not be great, and even if it should be twice as much as it is, how much cheaper it would be to remove the temptation to perpetrate fraud, by means of such inducements as the one we propose. It is an act of justice and also of sound policy, and as both we commend it. When it becomes general, we shall cease to hear daily of defaulting officers; for we are convinced that most of the dishonesty is due to a desire to provide for a winter of want, when age incapacitates these men from active struggles for the means of support.

THE NEW LAW FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF DISTILLED SPIRITS .- The Internal Revenue law, so far as it relates to distilled spirits, was much modified by the late Congress. Its provisions are rendered much more stringent. The power of the revenue officers in making seizures and suppressing fraud is greatly increased. The distillery inspectorship, which proved such a wide-open door for the grossest corruption, has been abolished. Honest dis. tillers, if there are any such, will be better protected in their business, and the rascals will have to be sharper than ever in their frauds to escape detection.

It is for the interest of the whole community that the liquor business should pay its legal proportion of taxes into the treasury-What the fraudulent distiller chisels the Government out of, is necessarily so much added to the taxes of the honest portion of the community. Last year the distillers cheated the Government out of one hundred millions of dollars. It is to be hoped that they will not succeed in doing it again this year.

Missouri.-We are glad to see that the State of Missouri has taken steps for the restoration of her credit, by providing for the immediate payment of the accumulated interest upon her bonds. The natural resources of that State are unexcelled by those of any State in the Union, and there is no good reason why her credit should not be as high as that of Pennsylvania or New York. A vast tide of immigration is flowing into Missouri, and her surpassing mineral resources are beginning to be developed. In a very few years she will rank in population and resources among the feremost States of the Re-

GOVERNOR WELLS AND THE RECONSTRUCTION Law. Governor Wells, of Louisiana, is moving promptly for the reconstruction of that State. He has issued a proclamation announcing the passage of the Reconstruction bill, and informing the people that hereafter all elections in the State must be held in conformity with the provisions of that law, and all candidates for office must be such as are qualified by that act to serve. No others will be allowed to exercise official functions, even if elected.

FOURTH EDITION

LATEST FROM WASHINGTON.

[SPECIAL DESPATCHES TO EVENING TELEGRAPH.] WASHINGTON, March 9.

The Adjournment. It is generally believed here that the House will not adjourn for some weeks, or until the impeachment question is disposed of. There is also other important work about to be brought before Congress.

The Committees.

under pay as soon as practicable

Speaker Colfax said to-day that he would announce most of the Committees of the new House on Monday next, so that there will be no further delay in the work of Congress,

The Military Bill. The President seems to be in no hurry to execute the Military Reconstruction act. He has informed a friend that he would much rather have the Southern people begin action under it before he appoints the military commanders, General Grant opposes this, and wants the offi-cers assigned at once, so as to get the scheme Office Hunters. The President has been besieged again to-day with place hunters. He will send about six hundred nominations to the Senate next week.

Miles O'Rielley's Confabs. It is understood here that the conversations reported to have taken place between General Halpine, of the New York Citizen, and the Presi-dent, are not founded in fact, but are "fancy sketches" gotten up for "buncombe" purposes.

A BRACE OF THIEVES ARRESTED .- About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a couple of men went into the flour store of Mr. Eckstein, at the corner of Fifth street and Girard avenue, and whilst the proprietor was busy in another part of the store, they went to a coat that was hanging up, and took from one of the pockets a wailet containing some money and papers. They were, however, observed by a boy employed there, and he informed his employer and gave the alarm. The thieves attempted to escape, and threw the wailet behind the door as they went out. They were both, however, captured as they were entering a street car. They gave the names of John Hoyt and Henry Wheeler, and they have a hearing this after-noon at the Central Station, before Alderman

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF .- William Watson, residing at No. 721 S. Seventh street, for driving over an old man named Terrence Matthews, on over an old man named Terrence Mattnews, on the corner of Sixth and Chesnut streets, on Thursday evening, and badly injuring him, was held in $500 ball to answer at the next term of the County Court, by Alderman Bettler. Peter McQuin for being so drunk that he could not take care of himself, was fined five
