A Word of Caution to the Contributors to Southern Relief.

We would drop a word of caution to our citizens in making contributions for the relief of the Southern poor. If they would avoid being imposed upon, and the danger of having their contributions misapplied or appropriated to personal ends, let them make their donations directly to some well-known and responsible organization, and avoid putting their money into the hands of special agents, no matter how well recommended. No safer method can be devised than to put contributions directly in charge of the Bureau for Freedmen and Refugees, of which that noble Christian patriot and soldier, Major-General Howard, is the head. Its agents are scattered all over the South, are well acquainted with the circumstances of the people in the various localities, can be depended upon to make a wise and impartial distribution of the benefactions committed to their trust, and will do the work free of charge, as they are paid by the Government.

The American Union Commission, of this city, of which Samuel V. Merrick is President, offers to take charge of the distribution of funds for the relief of the South. This is a safe and reliable organization, composed of our own citizens, and having excellent facilities for doing the proposed work.

We drop this word of caution, because whenever the community is aroused to give by the spectacle of suffering on a large scale, there are always a greedy brood of cormorants who make their appearance, collect funds, and pocket the proceeds. We saw something of this some six or eight years ago, when contributions were made to the starving poor of Kansas. If the benevolent would have their contributions reach the class for whom they are designed, let them contribute solely through established and responsible agencies. Avoid giving money to private individuals, trusting to their honor and judgment for a proper application of it.

Law Reforms.

There is a bill now before our Legislature allowing interested parties to testify in their own suits. This is a measure of legal reform already adopted in many of the States of the Union, and probably destined to prevail in all. The old assumption that the right way to get at the truth is to exclude the very parties who know the most about it, is being very generally abandoned. The theory now is that it is better to let all the facts in the case be brought out. The fact that a party is interested may be apt to affect the credibility of his testimony, but ought not to exclude it. Interested parties undoubtedly would be tempted to testify as favorably as possible for themselves, and in some cases might even commit downright perjury; but it is a difficult matter for a false witness to stand the test of a skillful and searching cross-examination. We have no doubt that in a great majority of instances a jury, after hearing the testimony of the parties interested, in connection with the other testimony, would be enabled to more justly find a verdict according to the real merits in any given case than they would without the testimony of such parties.

In many instances, to deprive a man of the right of testifying in his own case is to deprive him of justice altogether. The facts may be known only to the parties themselves. What propriety in such cases can there be in preventing them from testifying?

We believe that the allowing of parties to testify in their own cases, and the allowing of verdicts to be found by two-thirds of a jury, would be two reforms which would go a great way in securing a better administration of justice throughout the country. We regard the latter as quite as important as the former. A single corrupt jurymen can now defeat the ends of justice in any case. If he do not prevent the finding of any verdict at all, he can force the finding of such an one as shall accommodate his notions rather than the ends of justice. In a vast majority of instances, we believe that a verdict found by eight jurors out of twelve would conform more nearly to the law and the facts of the case than a unanimous verdict of the twelve.

A RITUALISTIC SPECTACLE.—The last proceeding of the New York Ritualists were conducted somewhat as follows:—At eight in the evening, the clergy, three in number, entered the church, accompanied by the choristers, one of the latter having a large gilded cross of black walnut. A Lenten hymn was sung as processional, after which the rector knelt at the foot-stool, and chanted the Litany. The sermon followed, the preacher preceding it by marking himself with the sign of the cross, and repeating an invocation to the Trinity, after the manner of the Church of Rome. The performance was closed by chanting the Miserere, and the special Collects for Ash-Wednesday.

INCONSISTENT.—Our Democratic contemporary attempts to make a little capital out of the opposition of General Butler and some other Republican members of Congress to the bill appropriating one million dollars to the relief of the poor of the South. It takes no notice of the opposition of its political friends, Fernando Wood and Chandler, to the same measure. Wood's opposition was of the most radical character, for he declared, on the strength of his own personal observation, that the "South did not need any help from the North." Our contemporary would do well to devote a little of its surplus invective to the members of its own party.

THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.—We are glad to record the appointment and confirmation of Hon. Henry Barnard, of Connecticut, as Commissioner of Education, under the recent law of Congress providing for a Department of Education. Mr. Barnard has long been known as one of the ablest men connected with the cause of public schools. He has been at the head of the School Department in the States of Rhode Island and Connecticut, and in Massachusetts, also, we believe. He is an accomplished public speaker, has made the subject of education in all its aspects a specialty for many years, and will bring to his new position a vast fund of experience and information. The appointment is one eminently "fit to be made," and augurs well for the usefulness and success of the new Department of Education.

MANUFACTURING HOPE.—The New York World occupies half a column with a list of the various towns in New Hampshire in which the Democracy have achieved gains. Most of the towns indicate an increase of from two to ten of their inhabitants. From these astonishing changes the World congratulates itself that the prospects of the Democracy look bright. The radicals have swept the entire State, carrying all their candidates, and actually show an increase in the total vote polled, the causes for the greater increase of the Democracy being found in the fact that the friends of a certain defeated candidate for the Republican nomination omitted to vote for his successful competitor. If the Democratic party shows no greater signs of returning life than that evinced in the Granite State, we think it is dead beyond resurrection.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD.—The annual report of the Illinois Central Railroad conveys a better idea of the growth of that State than any panegyric. It states that the earnings for the past year amount to $6,546,741-56, showing a deficit, as compared with 1865, of $934,450-90; the operation expenses, $4,371,294-09, being $634,900-18 less than in 1865; and the net earnings, $2,175,447-38, against $2,174,924-10 in 1865—being about the same as last year. The deficit, as compared with the previous year, appears entirely in the passenger traffic, and is owing to the closing up of the war and consequent falling off in the transportation of troops. The immense amount of traffic, and the increasing development of the resources of the West, is best evidenced by the transportation of this one road.

THE GROWTH OF OUR CITY. MR. PARTON, in a recent number of the Atlantic Monthly, tells the wonders of Chicago—a city built in thirty years, and which now bids fair to rival all her great sisters of the Old or New World. We read with interest the description of its size, and have heard Philadelphians express wonder at what an enormous city it must be. By reading that one article many life-long residents in our midst are made more familiar with the new metropolis of the Northwest than they are with their native municipality. Most of our readers do not know what an enormous affair the City of Brotherly Love really is. They know that part bounded by a few squares north of Market and extending a few squares south; they know there is a place called Kensington and another called Richmond, and that they are north of Market street, and with that simple idea they are satisfied. Yet within a few years, quietly and without ostentation, the limits of the built-up portion of our city have been gradually extending themselves. While the more wealthy portion of the inhabitants are going towards the west, and locating themselves towards the Schuylkill, the artisans and mechanics have been pushing their homes towards the north and south, and, in imitation of their opulent neighbors, leaving the central part of the Delaware neighborhood of the municipality to the business and turmoil of money-making. If any one wants to become aware of the immense number of workmen who daily go so far north as to have their resting-place lost in a maze of streets whose names are utterly unknown to our readers, let him walk down any street east of Seventh, about six o'clock in the evening of any day in the week. It would seem as though one long procession was marching to the north. A continuous stream of laborers, firemen, mechanics, and all those who are engaged in manual labor, pours out of all these streets towards Kensington and Richmond. In those localities which lie along the banks of the Delaware, which are numbered differently from the rest of the city, are located small, neat houses suitable for the residences of families; and here this long line finds a home. We have often heard it asked, Where do our workmen live? Let any who desire to know face these crowds, and they will find in what direction the growth of small houses is taking.

While the rendezvous of many of our boys and sinners are to the north, the south of Philadelphia is also extending itself. The acceptance of League Island will necessitate the erection of a little village of homes for the workmen when the Navy Yard is removed there. While commerce is also tending in that direction, we shall soon see the day when from the Island to the present limits of the city will be a continuous line of residences, warehouses, and the like. We are all aware of the growth of Chicago, and are familiar with the constant trampetings of New York. Let us turn to our own city, and see how she is extending herself. Evidently fitted by position to be the largest city of America, with no cramped-up space, with boundaries marked by nature, all that is required is that energy be infused into her arteries, and that she be given a fair chance to recover the ground she has lost. The commencement of a regular line of steamers to the Southern ports, and the certainty of her having the Government iron-clad depot erected within her bounds, ought to infuse new life into her commerce; and will, we hope, mark the opening of an era of greater energy and progress than that exhibited during the last decade. While the palatial homes of her merchants extend themselves towards the west, new space is opened for the development of trade; and with that perseverance and discretion which her mercantile community constantly possess, she can regain the place assumed so arrogantly by her aspiring sister.
