THE TO SELECT TANK A LIGHT WITH THE PROPERTY OF THE VALUE OF THE PARTY OF THE PARTY

SOCIAL STRATA OF LONDON.

The social stratification of London streets (saya Belgravia), is seen to the best advantage in the course of a walk from, say, Farwingdon street to Hyde Park Corner. In the course of this walk you meet with thirty or forty distinct types of men, who may be broadly taken as belonging to the same social class, but who possess, nevertheless, indi-vidualities which a skilled observer will have very little difficulty in detecting.

OLD BAILEY WITNESSES, If we start westward from St. Paul's Churchyard, the first important type that we meet with is the Old Bailey witness. And it is curious to observe how wonderfully alike these Old Bailey witnesses are, considering that they are not brought together by any process of selection. They are merely a "fortuitous concourse of atoms," brought into contact by totally distinct chains of circumstance. They have, probably, no concern in common, save the desire to produce the conviction or acquittal of the prisoners in whom they are respectively interested; but they seem to be drawn from precisely the same class of society, and to be, moreover, on intimate terms with each other. They all look as if they had been waiting about the corner of Ludgate Hill and the Old Bailey for months past, and had had no opportunity of attending to their toilets during the time. They all look mildewy and unwholesome; and they wear, for the most part, the same look of painful preoccupation.

"BETTING MEN." Who are these seedy, gin-flavored, rednosed, knowing-looking fellows, who hang about the corner, common to Bridge street and Fleet street? They occupy the whole breadth of the footway, and so drive respectable passers-by into the muddy roadway.
They are betting-men, and they are busy with their books on the principal forthcoming
"events." A curious feature of these gentry is that their toilet is source, and to a certain is, that their toilet is spruce, and, to a certain extent, neat, though decidedly flashy, as regards the upper part of their persons; but the lower you go down, the seedier they get. Their hats are old, but they are glossy, notwithstanding—glossy with the gloss they derive from the application of wet sponges; their collars are often clean and their nears. their collars are often clean, and their neckscarfs are arranged with an elaborate precision which you would look for in vain among members of recognized professions; you will find them secured with a thick gold pin, and this thick gold pin will be stuck, with mathematical precision, right into their exact centres. But after this comes a falling off. The coat, which once was blue or green, is a rusty brown, except in those parts which are partially protected from atmospheric and other influences by the collar, pocket-flaps, and arms, and from which you may obtain a clue that will guide you to the garment's original color. But, bad as are their coats, they are quite respectable when the trousers are taken into consideration; and the trousers are evidently. ashamed (and with reason) of their association with the boots. I suppose that this anomalous state of things is to be accounted for by the fact that these gentlemen transact their business in great crowds, and the lower part of their persons being consequently concealed from view, they do not see the necessity of spending much money upon its

"GENTLEMEN OF THE PRESS." Between this and Chancery Lane, the pre-dominant feature in the crowd will be a number of seedy, rather dirty, but more or less intellectual-looking men, with long hair, unkempt leards, and no gloves. These are pro-bably journalists. They all know each other and they are all very sociably disposed. So much so, indeed, that they find it a work of time to get from one end of Fleet street to the other.

PRINTERS AND DEVILS. Other features of this eastward half of Fleet street, are pale-faced men, with shock heads, and weak eyes, who go about in shirt-sleeves and slippers, and small boys with smudgy faces, big dirty calico aprons, and arms bared to the elbow. These are painters and "devils." They are to be found in great numbers about the turnings north of Fleet street, especially Wine Office Court, between one and two o'clock in the afternoon. They will turn up again when we have passed the Church of St. Mary in the Strand.

BARRISTERS AND BAR-STUDENTS. Now we come under Temple influences. The ugly, clever-looking men, with powerful mouths and firm upper lips, who are dressed carelessly enough, but who look like gentlemen notwithstanding, are barristers, eminent at Westminster and Guildhall. It may be taken as a tolerably safe rule that, the shabbier the barrister, the more he has to do. There are certainly such things as dandy Queen's Counsel, and needy men in their first year to be found; but these may be taken as the exceptions which are said to prove every rule. The string of gentlemanly, well dressed young fellows who are turning into Inner Temple Lane, as we pass, are bar-students, who are bound for the Common Law lecture, in Inner Temple Hall. They are smart enough now; but, ten years hence, if they attain anything like success in the profession they have chosen, they will be as careless as to their personal appearance as they are now particular. The snuffy, dried-up old gentleman, who is crossing the road towards Chancery Lane, and who would look like an under taker's mute, if we judged him by his clothes alone, is an eminent common-law judge, on his way to Judges' Chambers in Searjeants' Inn.

INVENTORS AND GOVERNMENT CLERKS, Temple influences extend to Essex street; and from Essex street to Somerset House there is little to remark in the passers-by, except that there is a certain rustic look about many of them, combined with an expression of thoughtful anxiety on their faces, which suggests that they are inventors, and wouldbe patentees, who are occupying temporary lodgings in Norfolk and Arundel streets. Passing a group of raw youths, who are King's College students, we find ourselves in the midst of a crowd of passengers, most of whom are Government clerks. These are gentlemanlylooking young men, who are employes in the Admiralty and Audit Offices, and others, not quite so gentlemanly, who devote their attention to the innumerable details of the Inland Revenue. THEATRICAL CHARACTERS. As soon as we have passed Wellington street, the Strand assumes a theatrical tone, which there is no mistaking, Close-shaven men, with new hats, blue chins, and moustachies, pervade the thoroughfare in twos and threes, between Wellington street and Lacy's, the theatrical bookseller. Young ladieswhose faces you seem to know, but you can't think where you have seen them-pass and repass, nodding to the blue-chinned gentlemen, whose appearance is not altogether unfamiliar to you, although you can't make out, for the life of you, where you and they have the first rank in the profession perhaps, but decent, middle-class professionals, whose names, at all events, are known to you, if you tile and clerkly element, especially between 4 are a pretty regular theatre-goer. They are | and 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

going to, or coming from rehearsal; or perhaps the gentlemen are out of engagements, and having no "lengths" to study, and no rehearsals to attend, find a consolation in spending the tedious day in the neighborhood of the theatrical taverns and small clubs, with which the district north of the Strand abounds; and, perhaps, the ladies are bound for their afternoon coffee and buns at Creighton's.

AUTHORS. The interval between Southampton street and the Adelphi may be regarded as the peculiar property of dramatists, actors, essayists, and authors of every reputable class. Three or four well-known literary and theatrical clubs are within a few hundred yards of this classic spot; and it will rarely happen that you can traverse the short distance between Southampton street and the Adelphi, without meeting some one whose name, at all events, is, or should be familiar to you, if you pretend to be at all au fait in literary or theatrical affairs. This is particularly the case on a Saturday afternoon. New pieces of importance are usually produced on Saturday nights now-a-days; and the actors, dramatists, and critics who are interested in the result, usually dine at one or other of the clubs to which I have alluded, before they proceed to the "business of the evening."

"SENIGR" CLUB-MEN. The interval between the Adelphi and Pall Mall has, perkaps, less individuality than any other portion of the route we have chosen. We will, if you please, avoid the Haymarket and make our way westward through Pall Mall. After passing an unsavory collection of Jew cigar-dealers, distinguished foreigners, and heap little men about town, which infests the Colonnade, we reach the eastern limit of West End life. Pall Mall is, as everybody knows, the headquarters of London clubdom. The first indication of this is to be found in the pursy, mottle-faced old warriors who are to be seen going in and out of the "Senior." They do not ounge on the steps of their club, these mottlefaced old gentlemen, as do their younger brethren of the "Rag," They go in and come out with an air of doing it with a purpose; for the most part, their days of lounging and loafing about London are long past. They have been bucks of the first water in their day; but their day is gone by, and, though they are bucks still they are bucks with a smack rather of the Regency than of the Victoria era. They still stick to the high collars, stiff satin stock, curly hat, and tight straps of forty years ago; but, for all their accuracy of dress and punctillo of manner, these old gentlemen, as a rule, are very jolly old gentlemen indeed, when they get together. They have good stories to tell about this or that downger—when she was a reigning beauty in '23, though, for matter of that, they do not confine their attention to dowagers. The beauties of '23 have grown old in mind as well as in body; but the dashing subs who admired them then, have remained much as they were, save in the matter of rank and outward appearance. Their faces are redder, and their moustaches whiter, their sword-belts have been let out some half dozen holes, and their morning headaches have given way to chronic gout; but their tastes are those of young fellows of thirty, nevertheless. They have the reputation of being stern old pipeclayists, and the stiff high stock, cross-belts, and white-braided coattee, find staunch advocates among them still. Many of them are decrepit enough now; but see them on a level day; decrepitude never looks so well as when decked out in stars, medals, and K. C. B. ribbons, and passers-by, who would not hesitate to sneer at the quiet and rather eccentric looking old gentleman in clothes of superannuated cut as a "mouldy old fogy," step respectfully aside to allow him to pass, when decked in the bravery he has won in the Peninsula, India, and the Crimea.

ATHENÆUM CLUB-MEN. Who are these solemn old gentlemen, with gold eye-glasses, and ugly, but intelligent faces, who are turning in and out of the building at the opposite corner of Waterloo Place They are members of the Atheneum, the most eminent, from an intellectual point of view, and the most unsociable from a domestic point of view, of all the first-class in London. These grave old gentlemen are distinguished antiquarians, adventurous travellers, emi nent divines, successful barristers, popular novelists, and first-class essayists. If you want to make one of them, you must wait patiently for the fifteen years or so which must elapse between your nomination and election-don't be deterred by the consideration that you are not an eminent man nowyou may be utterly unknown to every soul in England, except your relations and your tradespeople at the date of your nomination, and Great Britain may ring with your fame long before your election. You will have plenty of time between those two dates, to make for yourself a famous name—and to lose it, and be utterly forgotten, too, for matter of

OTHER CLUBDOM. These busy, independent-looking gentle-men are members of the Reform Club; and those remarkable, gentlemanly-looking old Conservatives are members of the Carlton -two clubs that sit side by side, and frown at each other out of the corners of their eyes, like two old ladies who are not "on erms," but who happen to rent adjoining stalls at the opera. Another batch of dashing-going civil servants are hovering about the entrance to the War Office: and, opposite, a group of smart young warriors are lounging about the steps of the Rag. These young gentlemen are fair type of better middle-class young English They are generally well-dressed; they smoke fair cigars; they are honorable; they are in debt; they are brave; they are rather fast: but, nevertheless, they are gentlemanly. should like to talk about them for two or three pages more, for I take a kindly pleasure in studying the ways and means of these military and civil cervants of the Crown; but the exigencies of time and space will only allow me to glance at them en passant. The British linesman is altogether a peculiar beingutterly unlike any other member of any other profession, and he deserves an essay to himself. As you see him here on the steps of the Rag, he is probably up from Aldershott, Canterbury, or Colchester, for a few days in Piccadilly, the Burlington Arcade, and (in the season) Rotten Row and the drive-and for a few nights at the burlesque theatres.

Passing the gloomy portals of the Oxford and Cambridge Club, with its clerical and country sentlemen members, and the snug little "Guards," with its soldierly, aristocratic habitue's, we come upon St. James street, where the constituents of all the clubs in Pall Mall hesides those of Arthur's, White's, Boodle's, the Conservative, the St. James, the New University, and half-a-dozen others, meet on common ground, and so on into Piccadilly, where the stream of West End life is consider ably adulterated by the admixture of a powerful trade element, which, however, may be said to cease where the Green Park begins, and from this point to Hyde Park Corner, met. These are actors and actresses—not of the people you meet are, for the most part, the first rank in the profession perhaps, but such as those you found in Pall Mall, together with a considerable sprinkling of the mercan-
