REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS. CYCLOPEDIA OF BIBLICAL, THROLOGICAL AN

ECCESIASTICAL LITERATURE. Vol. I. A. B. By Rev. Dr. John McClintock and James Storey, S. T. D. New York: Harpor & Brothers, Philadelphia Agent: J. K. Simon, South

The large volume before us is the first of a number, which are to contain a complete cyclopædia of all religious knowledge. In its proportions the undertaking is gigantic; in the research displayed in the first volume, we see evidence of the completed work being a great success. The laborious nature of the task can be best appreciated by examining the work itself. We have seldom, if ever, seen a more stupendous literary undertaking. A history of England is a mere bagatelle in comparison. The compilers and authors have little or no data to work upon. Almost every other work of great size has a nucleus around which additional facts can be grouped, and the work gradually grow to completion. Not so in the work before us. It is original in its nature; it from the occurrence. has no precedent on which to base its facts or its arguments; and it promises not only to be the first of its kind, but also, by its completeness, to supersede the necessity for any similar work in the future. It is filled with correct and elegantly executed illustrations, and is arranged with a fulness and compactness combined which reflect infinite credit on the author. It will prove an invaluable addition to every religious library of all the religious denominations in the land.

Women's Work in the Civil War. By L. P. Brackett. Philadelphia: Zeigler, McGurdy & Co., No. 501 Arch street.

The volume before us covers a field of experience in the events of the late war heretofore unoccupied. We have all known of the vast aid extended to the Union cause by the women of the North. We have all of us seen instances of their patriotic devotion and selfsacrifice for the cause of the Union. But a full and complete work, containing all those who have secured a leading position by their eminent services, was a desideratum not reached until the appearance of the work before us. It contains a slight sketch of all the ladies who held prominent positions, or were noted for their exertions to aid our soldiers. While the names of all patriotic women who ventured among the sick, and strove to alleviate their sufferings, can never be known, for their name is legion, yet the volume issued by Dr. Brackett is as full as possible, and most pleasantly written. It is not dry detail; it is a narrative of the most interesting order. It is beautifully printed, with new type, and filled with excellent steel engravings, and is admirably stereotyped by Westcott & Thompson. It deserves to have a large sale.

THE CELEBRATED JUMPING FROG, AND OTHER SKETCHES. By Mark Twain. Philadelphia: American News Company.

Although the title of this work is derived from the first story it contains, yet the chief merit of the compilation is found in the following sketches. The "Jumping Frog" is not exquisitely funny. It is readable and original. and has a few comic points, but it, and the greater portion of the volume, are attempts at wit, so forced and strained as to be unnatural. In our opinion, by far the best article is that on "Chambermaids," which, in order to do full justice to the author, we venture to republish as an extract:-

"Against all chambermaids, of whatsoever age or nationality, I launch the curse of bachelordom! Because:— "They always put the pillows at the opposite and of the bed from the gas-burner, so that while you read and smoke before sleeping (as is the culent and benored custom of bachelors). the ancient and honored custom of bachelors), you have to hold your book aloft, in an uncom-fortable position, to keep the light from dazzling your eyes.

"When they find the pillows removed to the other end of the bed in the morning, they receive not the suggestion in a friendly spirit; but, glorying in their absolute sovereignty, and unpitying your heipiessness, they make the bed just as it was originally, and gloat in secret over the pang their tyranny will cause you.

"Always after that, when they find you have transposed the pillows, they undo your work, and thus defy and seek to embitter the life that God has given you.

"If they cannot get the light in an inconvenient position any other way, they move the "If you pull your trunk out six inches from the wall, so that the lid will stay up when you open it, they slways shove that trunk back again. They do it on purpose.

"If you want the spittoon in a certain spot, where it will be handy, they don't, and so they

"They always put your other boots into inac-cessible piaces. They chiefly edjoy depositing them as far under the bed as the wall will per-mit. It is because this compels you to get down in an undignified attitude and make wild sweeps for them in the dark with the boot-jack, and swear.

"They always put the match-box in some other place. They hunt up a new place for it every day, and put up a bottle or other perishable glass thing, where the box stood before. This is to cause you to break that glass thing, groping in the dark, and get yourself into trouble.

groping in the dark, and get yourself into trouble.

"They are forever and ever moving the furniture. When you come in in the night, you can calculate on finding the bureau where the ward-robe was in the morning. And when you go out in the morning, if you leave the slop-bucket by the door and rocking-chair by the window, when you come in at midnight or thereabouts, you will fall over that rocking-chair, and you will proceed towards the window and sit down in that slop-tub. This will disgust you. They like that in that slop-tub. This will disgust you. They like that.

"No matter where you put anything, they are not going to let it stay there. They will take it and move it the first chance they get. It is their nature. And, besides, it gives them pleasure to be mean and contrary this way. They would die if they couldn't be villains.

"They always save up all the old scraps of printed rubbish you throw on the floor, and stack them up carefully on the table, and start the fire with your valuable manuscripts. If there is any one particular old scrap that you are more down on than any other, and which you are gradually wearing your life out trying to get rid of, you may take all the pains you possibly can in that direction, but it won't be of any use, because they will always fetch that old scrap back and put it in the same old place again every time. It does them good.

"And they use up more hair-oil than any six men. If charged with purioning the same, they lie about it. What do they care about a hereafter? Absolutely nothing.

"If you leave your key in the door for convenience sake, they will carry it down to the office and give it to the clerk. They do this under the vile pretense of trying to protect your property from thieves; but actually they do it because they want to make you tramp back down-stairs after it when you come home tired, or put you to the trouble of sending a waiter for it, which waiter will expect you to pay him something. In which case I suppose the degraded creatures divide.

"They keep always trying to make your bed divide.

"They keep always trying to make your bed before you get up, thus destroying your rest and inflicting agony upon you; but after you get up, they don't come any more till next day.

"They do all the mean things they can think of, and they do them just out of pure cussedness, and nothing else. "Chambernalds are dead to every human

I have cursed them in behalf of outraged buchelordom. They deserve it. If I can get a bill through the Legislature abolishing cham-bermalds, I mean to do it."

This sketch is pungent because it is all true s any gentleman who has boarded at any hotel can testify. The book is neatly published and well printed, but is inferior to the other attempts of the author, especially that of travestying popular writers. We hesitate, from prudential reasons, to name any particular travestie, lest we might inadvertently transgress a provision of that excellent but voluminous law to protect authors which Con gress has passed, and to which Mark Twain devotes himself as light reading.

-The last volume of Froude's "History of England" contains a finely written account of the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, which, for graphic description and veracity of details, has no superior in literature. On perusing it the blood runs cold, even at this distance of time

THE NIGHT OF ST. BARTHOLOMEW. Night had not fallen. Guise and Aumale were still larking to the city, and came with the Duke of Montpensier at Catherine's sum-mons. The persons who were to be killed were in different parts of the town. Each took charge of a district. Montpensier promised to White handkerchief on the left arm and a white cross in their caps. The Royal Guard, Catholics to a man, were instruments ready made for the work. Guise assembled the officers: he told them that the Huguenots were preparing to rise, and that the King had ordered their in-stant punishment. The officers asked no quesstant punishment. The officers used no questions, and desired no better service. The business was to begin at dawn. The signal would be the tolling of the great beil at the Palace of Justice, and the first death was to be Coligny's. The soldiers stole to their posts. Tweive nundred lay along the Seine, between the river and the Hotel de Ville; other companies watched at the Louvre. As the darkness waned, the Queen Mother went down to the gate. The stiliness of the dawn was broken by an accidental pistolof the dawn was broken by an accidental pistol-shot. Her heart sank, and she sent of a mes-senger to tell Guise to pause. But it was too late. A minute later the belt boomed out, and the massacre of St. Bartholomew had com-

The Admiral was feverish with his wounds, and had not slept. The surgeon and a Hugue-not minister, named Malin, had passed the night with him. At the first sounds he imagined that there was an emeute of the Uatho-lics at the Court; but the crass of his own gate, and shots and shrieks in the court below the window, told him that, whatever was the cause, his own life was in danger. He sat up in his his own life was in danger. He sat up in his bed. "M. Malin," he said, "pray for me; I have long expected this," Some of his attendants rushed halt-dressed into the room. "Gentlemen, save yourselves," he said to them; "I commend my soul to my Saviour."
They scattered essenting or trying to escape.

They scattered, escaping, or trying to escape, by the roofs and balconies; a German servant alone remained with him. The door was burst open immediately after, and the officer who alone remained with him. The door was burst open immediately after, and the officer who was in charge of the house, a Bohemian servant of Guise, and a renegade Huguenot soldier, rushed in with drawn swords.

"Are you the Admiral?" the Bohemian cried.

"I am,"replied Coligny; "and, young man, you should respect my age and my wounds; but the term of my life does not rest in the pleasure of such as thou."

The Bohemian, with a curse, stabbed him in the breast, and struck him again on the head. The window was open. "Is it done?" cried Guise from the court below, "is it done? Fling him out, that we may see him." Still breathing, the Admiral was hurled upon the pavement. The Bastard of Angonieme wiped the blood from his face to be sure of his identity, and then, kicking him as he lay, shouted: "So far well. Courage, my brave boys! now for the rest," One of the Duc de Nevers' people hacked off the head. A rope was knotled about the ankles, and the corpse was dragged into the street amid the howling crowd. Teligny, who was in the adjoining house, had sprung out of bed at the first disturbance, ran down into the court, and climbed by a ladder to the roof. From behind a parapet he saw his spring out of bed at the first disturbance, ran down into the court, and climbed by a ladder to the roof. From behind a parapet he saw his father-in-law murdered, and, scrambling on the tiles, concealed himself in a garret; but he was soon tracked, torn from his hiding place, and thrown upon the stones with a dagger in his side. Rochefoucault and the rest of the Admiral's friends who lodged in the neighborhood were disposed of in the same way, and so complete was the surprise that there was not the most faint attempt at resistance.

Montpensier had been no less successful in plete was the surprise that there was not the most faint attempt at resistance.

Montpensier had been no less successful in the Louvre. The staircases were all beset. The retinues of the King of Navarre and the Prince had been lodged in the Palace at Charles' particular desire. Their names were called over, and, as they descended unarmed into the quadrangle, they were hewn in pieces. There, in heaps, they fell below the royal window, under the eyes of the miserable King, who was forced forward, between his mother and his brother, that he might be seen as the accomplice of the massacre. Most of the victims were killed upon the spot. Some fied wounded up the stairs, and were slaughtered in the presence of the Princesses. One gentleman rushed bleeding into the apartment of the newly-married Margaret, clung to her dress, and was hardly saved by her intercession. By 7 o'clock the work which Gulze and his immediate friends had undertaken was finished, with but one failure.

taken was finished, with but one failure.

The Count Montgomery and the Vidame of Chartres lodged in the Faubourg St. Germain, across the water, on the outskirts of the town. A party of assassins had been sent to despatch them, but had loitered on the way to do some A party of assassins had been sent to despatch them, but had loitered on the way to do some private murdering on their own account.
When the news reached Montgomery that Paris was up, he supposed, like Coligny, that the Catholics had arisen against the court. He ran down the river's bank with a handful of men behind him, opposite the Tulieries, intending to cross to help his friends; but the boats were all secured on the other side. The soldiers shot at him from under the place. It was said—it rests only on the worthless authority of Brantome—that Charles himself in his frenzy snatched a gun from a servant and fired at him also. Montgomery did not wait for further explanation. He, the Vidame, and a few others, sprang to their horses, rode for their lives, and escaped to England.

The mob meanwhile was in full enjoyment.
Long possessed with the accursed formulas of the priests, they believed that the enemies of God were given into their hands. While dukes and lords were killing at the Louvre, the bands of the sections imitated them with more success; men, women, and even children, striving which should be the first in the plous work of cess; men, women, and even children, striving which should be the first in the pious work of murder. All Catholic Paris was at the business, and every Huguenot householder had neighbors to know and denounce them. Through street and lane, and quay and causeway, the air and every Huguenot householder had neighbors to know and denounce them. Through street and lane, and quay and causeway, the air rang with yells and curses, pistol shots and crashing windows; the roadways were strewed with mangled bodies, the doors were blocked by the dead and dying. From garret, closet, roof, or stable, crouching creatures were torn shrieking out, and stabbed and hacked at; boys practised their hands by strangling babies in their cradles, and headless bodies were trailed along the trottoirs. Carts struggled through the crowd carrying the dead in plies to the Seine, which, by special Providence, was that morning in flood, to assist in sweeping heresy away. Under the sanction of the great cause, lust, avarice, fear, malice, and revenge all had free indulgence, and glutted themselves to nausea. Even the distinctions of creed itself became at last confounded, and every man or woman who had a quarrel to avenge, a lawsuit to settle, a wife or husband grown inconvenient, or a prospective inheritance if obstacles could be removed, found a ready road to the object of their desires.

Towards midday some of the quieter people attempted to restore order. A party of the town police made their way to the palace. Charles caught eagerly at their offers of service, and bade them do their utmost to put the people down; but it was all in vain. The soldlers, maddened with plunder and blood, could not be brought to assist, and without them nothing could be done. All that afternoon and night, and the next day and the day after, the horrible scenes continued, till the flames burned down at last for want of tuel. The number who perished in Paris was computed variously at from 2000 to 10,000. In this, as in all such instances, the lowest estimate is probably the nearest to the truth.

LETTER PROM CHARLES DICKERS.

Ticknor & Fields have received the following letter from Charles Dickens, which will be read with interest, and perhaps excite controversy: "GAD'S HILL PLACE, HIGHAM BY ROCHESTER, KENT, Tuesday, Bixtoenth April, 1867.—Messrs. On the strength of other letters from Mr. Dickens, in which he speaks warmly of the 'Diamond Edition' of his works, and acknowedges the profit he has received therefrom. Ticknor & Fields are about to issue two new editions of his novels. These will be called 'The Charles Dickens Edition' and "The Illustrated Library Edition."
