EQUAL-SUFFRAGE MEETING AT

The Equal-Suffrage Convention met at this place yesterday. The meeting was very large and enthusiastic. James M. Scovel, Esq., presided, and Hon. D. S. Blackman, of Atlantic county, and other distinguished men from different counties, acted as Vice-Presidents.
Speeches were made by Major G. B. Haistead, James M. Scovel, Robert Purvis of Philadelphia, and Isainh Ware. The principal address was by Hon. T. D. Thucher.

The next speaker was J. K. H. Wilcox, Esq., editor of the Social Science Review, of New York. He made a very able and philosophical disquisition. sition, showing with much clearness that the right to vote was a natural right. Mr. Wilcox is a graduate of Columbia Law

School, and stands prominent among the thinkers of the country.

An Equal Suffrage Association was formed for the State, with James M. Scovel for President, and Lucy Stone for one of the Vice-Presidents.

Among the resolutions the following are the most characteristic of the sentiment of the meet-Resolved, That a republic, to be lasting, must the founded on civil and political equality, and the liberty of all, limited only by the like liberty of each; and that, in order to establish a republic of enduring strength, the former fabric of Southern society must be wholly changed, for in no part of our country has there yet existed a true democratic republic.

Resolved. That we bail with delight the recent action of Congress in giving to the Rebel States equal suffrage in the Military Reconstruction bill, and we rejoice in the fact accomplished that personal freedom, which the dark-skinned gas of the republic have won with their blood, now will not be a vain mockery, exposed to yielation at the caprice of their masters, en-hroned in the Legislature, on the Bench, and in the Executive chamber; but that it will be secured by the arms they hold and the bal-ots they cast, for it will be Liberty guarded by

ART OF SLEEPING IN PARLIAMENT. An English journal has this humorous sketch: 'Sleeping in the House of Commons is confucted upon scientific principles. Probably no member spends so many hours in the House at his post as Mr. Cowen, the M. P. for Newcastle—who is beginning to be known as the long sitter - and who has not yet learned the par-liamentary art of sleeping at his post, which is an indispensable thing in the House of Commons. On days of interest a member requires to be in his place at 3 o'clock if he is to secure his seat, and as a sitting generally lasts till 2 in the morning, it is not within mortal power to sit day by day closely watching weary debates without spending some of the time in siceping. Wily members prefer stopping away the early part of the sitting, and dropping in when questions are on that they care for. Others only come on certain days, and all, except the most attentive, go home before the late divisions, but all who attend constantly, quite as constantly (if they have any sense) sleep in the House. From the oldest Cabinet minister down to the newest member this is done. He is voted a 'rool' who attempts to meddle with every question, and if he waits for those he is concerned in he had better doze till they come to a decision than be absent. No one knows when divisions will come on, and to join in them a member must be on the spot, and to make up his mind to sleep (if necessary) at his post is the only way in which he can dis-charge his duty. Mr. J. S. Mill, an M. P. not wanting in watchfulness or prudence, sits for hours asleep with his face on his hand, having ad the precaution to choose a seat which ena-

'The public, who do not understand the thing, think when a small late House is half asleep, that the members are neglecting their duty, and are subjects of remark. The six hundred and thirty members who were absent and probably in bed, are, of course, unnoticeable in the House, while the twenty-eight who remain to the last are open to comments if not in the most vivid state of activity. When a member has mastered the merits of a question he has done his duty, and has only to wait till the division bell rings for action. Some members, like Mr. Scholefield, have great talent in dropping in only when they are wanted. Mr. Bright will stay away weeks together. Earl Russell introduced the broad-brimmed hat into the House

bles him to do it.

the convenience of sleeping under it. "Lord Palmerston tollowed the example, and was a great dozer. Mr. Gladstone stretches out both his legs and sleeps at full length; the members going up to Mr. Speaker sometimes tumble over him. Lord Halifax, when in the House, holding the office of Indian minister, used to lay his head back, open his mouth, and snore loud enough to be heard in Bengal. Some members who are lame are obliged to sit on that side of the House which enables them to rest their limbs with their face to the Speaker. Some, like Grantiev Berkeley, have to lean against the table to speak, because they cannot stand. Feeble members, like Mr. Roebuck, and blind members, like Mr. Fawcett, sit on the front bench below the gangway, and members with no heads sit all over the House."
