A President Declining Ego. Those who have taken the trouble to read Mr. Johnson's late speeches must have been struck by their exceeding tameness. There is no depth of thought, no vivacity of sentiment, no felicity of language about them. They are commonplace and barren to a remarkable degree. Even in his speech upon Masonry, delivered at the great Masonic celebration in Boston-a theme and an occasion which ought to have inspired him to eloquence-there is a poverty of thought and expression absolutely painful to contemplate. The only thing, aside from himself, that seemed particularly to impress his mind, was the fact that the Masons had paraded the streets in full regalia, and nobody had insulted them ! This seems to have been so unusual a thing in Mr. Johnson's experience, that his mind dwelt upon it. Perhaps, had he always lived in Boston, the scene of a procession quietly passing the streets without jeers would not have been so new or strange to him.

But whatever poverty of thought Mr. Johnson may exhibit upon ordinary topics, there is one subject upon which he never fails to have both ideas and language, and that is-himself. His egotism is boundless. What he has done, and said, and been, from alderman up-his devotion to principle, his consistency, his courage, his conscientiousness, and all his other virtues, are the themes of his neverceasing remark. No matter what the occasion or the circumstances, his mind naturally and inevitably falls into this train of thought. In this Boston speech, for instance, there are but four sentences that do not contain the personal pronoun referring to himself. He tells the audience first how thankful he is for the reception accorded him. He next excuses himself for not addressing them, and immediately proceeds to address them at length. Next he alludes to the fact that he has witnessed and participated in many Masonic celebrations, in which he has heard jeers and taunts cast upon the members for appearing in their proper attire. He then adds that he should not have visited Boston on this occasion had it not been for the Masonic Order. Fearing, apparently, that this statement might not be fully credited, he adds that he came in good faith for the express purpose of witnessing the dedication of the Temple, and to give it his countenance and sanction. And in the sentence he amusingly asserts that in this-that is, in to Boston-as "in most things in which he has participated," he has first satisfied his conscience that he was right, and then "left consequences to take care of themselves." This sentence was evidently lugged in to allow Mr. Johnson to boast of his conscientionsness. not so much in this trip to Boston as in those "most things" in which he has participated. He next runs back to the idea that he had not intended to make a speech, asserting that what he had said was by way of episode. But his mind still dwelling upon himself, he evidently supposes others to be thinking of his speech-making faculties, and adds that there are some, perhaps, who would not be prepared to concede that he was "not loquacious." But he avers "I am not, as a general thing, however, very garrulous or loquacious." Started on a new tack by these remarks, but still thinking of himself, he goes on to say that what little talking he has done has been from necessity rather than from choice. But it has only been on great occasions that he has talked. "When truth, when principle, when my country, when the great cause of the human family was at stake. I have spoken." With Mr. Johnson's speeches made last summer, in his notorious swinginground-the-circle campaign, before him, one might well suppose this passage to be ironical; but it is not. It is pure, simple egotism. It is Mr. Johnson setting himself up as the defender of truth, principle, his country, and the human family.

He next is apparently about to discuss the principles of Masonry, for he says:-"I believe that the great principles of Masonry are synonymous with the great principles of free government." But this is only half the sentence, and is merely introduced to pave the way for him to add-"and if my brothers will examine my public career from my advent in political life to the present time, I think they will find that I have been true to both." Still harping on himself, still beasting, still declining ego!

But he is not yet done. He next informs them that he is personally a stranger to Massachusetts, but still her "intimate friend and acquaintance," and that politically, when "these great principles" come up, men who understand them can act in harmony. He has never failed to defend the Order even in its most trying ordeals. And here he leaves the Order and swings around to the more congemial subject of himself alone. He says:-"I care not whether it is religion or polities, or both combined, in the pursuit and in support of a correct principle I have never hesitated to express my views. I live for principle, I am devoted to principle, and I take fresh courage from the demonstrations which have been made to-day," etc. And so with a fresh burst of self-laudation and self-congratulation this strange speech is brought to a close. From beginning to end, it is plain that Mr. Johnson was thinking solely of himself. The Masonic Order and its magnificent celebration were merely a string upon which he could array the shining pearls of his own assumed excellencies and virtues. Not Masonry, but Andrew Johnson, was his real topic of thought and

Is this the language of true worth? Is a man whose life has been so public and yet so consistent, so devoted to truth and principle, obliged to be forever reminding the people of these facts? Can't they see for themselves? The very anxiety which Mr. Johnson, so constantly displays in asserting his consistency, argues a secret consciousness that he has not been consistent, and that the people know it. His very asseverations of innocence betray the inward sense of guilt. His protestations of devotion to principle reveal the conscious want of it. If a man's course has been consistent, straightforward, upright, honest, and patriotic, he don't need to be telling everybody of it. The people are intelligent. They know the positions that public men have held, the principles they have advocated, and the record they have made. If Mr. Johnson's present position is consistent with the one he held when nominated and elected by the Union party; if the principles he now maintains are those he then maintained; if he is the same "Moses" to the colored race now that he was, or promised to be, when he made his celebrated speech to the colored people of Nashville; if he believes now as he did when he publicly urged the confiscation of Rebel estates. and the dividing up of their vast domains; if all these things are so, the people are sufficiently intelligent to know and appreciate it, without Mr. Johnson's so constantly taking the witness-stand in his own behalf. On the other hand, if these things are not so, no amount of palaver, to speak plainly, on the part of Mr. Johnson will suffice to change the public judgment of his position and conduct. In the future he will consult his own dignity, as well as that of the office he holds, by exhibiting a greater reticence in regard to him-The Presidents of the United States have generally been men of great personal dignity, and who knew how to receive those courtesies and attentions which are due to the office without thrusting their personal virtues, achievements, and records generally before the public. Let the present incumbent imitate their excellent example.

Speech of Major-General Rawlings. GENERAL JOHN A. RAWLINGS, Chief of Staff to General Grant, was called upon to deliver a speeck to the citizens of Galena, Illinois, and in response addressed them at great length. The opinions of General Rawlings, even did he not hold the position he does, would be of interest, as he is a brave soldier and an able lawyer. But his close and intimate relations with the General-in-Chief give to his words a semi-official utterance from that officer. We cannot say that the contents of the address are very committal. He reviews the war and its causes, and favors in extenso the Constitutional amendment. Speaking of the Reconstruction bill, he says:-

"If a State by its own wrong loses its republican form of government, the United States is in duty bound to restore it. If a State refuses protection to its citisens, the United States must afford it. To effect these purposes has been the aim of the United States in the late contest. The Civil Rights bill resulted. The execution of this being imperfect, the Reconstruction bill followed. The object and purpose of these acts cannot be deemed unconstitutional, for they cannot be deemed unconstitutional, for they are in the nature of an execution issued by a Court upon a judgment or decree, arrived at after a full hearing. The Government being possessed of all the evidence in the case, had, as in an action at law, delivered a judgment, and upon non-compliance with a decree, a posse comitatus, the army, had been called in to enforce the execution. Beyond a doubt it was necessary to use the military for this purpose, and under the Constitution that necessity is to be, and has been, judged of by the proper authorities."

The General strongly supports the bill, and argues at length in its favor. It is not impossible that, although so intimately connected with General Grant, General Rawlings may hold views diametrically opposed to his superior. But it is much more probable that his views coincide with those of the soldier with whom he has so long served. Could the country receive a clear expression of opinion from the chief military hero of the war, it would tend to allay that uneasiness which the unsettled political condition of the country naturally creates.

WORTHY OF THE PREMIER .- At Boston the following incident occurred, which reflects great credit on the dignity of the Secretary of State. Among other incidents, an old man familiarly addressed Secretary Seward, and said,-"How are you, Billy ?" The Secretary responded, "Very well, thank you; how are you?" The old man replied, with much good humor and emphasis, "Bully!"

This may seem rather strange to some, but then, probably, Hamilton, Clay, Earl Derby, or Lord John Russell would have done the same thing under like circumstances.

Explicit.-Mr. Johnson's reply to a speech of welcome in Boston, returned thanks "in behalf of the people I represent." We wonder where they can be found? Probably all Mr. Johnson's constituency were along with him, for we doubt if they extend beyond his private secretaries and himself.

SPEAKER COLFAX has written a letter calling on all the members of Congress to be in their seats on the 3d of July. To him will come a response from all those loyal Representatives who are this side of the Rocky Mountains. We consider the session an assured fact.

MERCHANTS' UNION EXPRESS COMPANY, A CARD,
OFFICE MERCHANTS UNION EXPRESS COMPANY, No. 365 Broadway, New York, June 23, 1887.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK HERALD:—
I notice in to day's issue of your paper the statement that a suit has been commenced for an injunction against the Merchants' Union Express Company, "for a receiver of its property, on the grounds of the reckless squandering of the money of the Company, its present insolvency, and the attempt on the part of a portion of the officers of the Company to effect for their own benefit a secret and clandestine arrangement for winding up the Company."

It is not true that any suit of this character has been commenced against this Company; but a summons and complaint were yesterday served on me individually, in the City of Auburn, wherein the above charges, with many others equally false and ridicalous, were set forth.

The complaint is but a part of the tactics of the enemy, being a tissue of falsehoods, and every material allegation therein is utterly and recklessly untrue.

The proceeding, although taken in the name of an natrue.

The proceeding, although taken in the name of an individual, is evidently instigated and conirolled by the managers of the old Express monopolles, and an unscrupu ons ring of stock-jobbers, who have, from the date of the organization of this Company, sought, y every device, to depreciate its stock, and shake the aith of its stockholders and the public in the value faith of its stock. Believing this to be the fact, we shall interpose no obstacle to a full and complete investigation; but, on the contrary, we shall court such investigation, when we shall disprove every material allegation in the complaint, and satisfy foca as well as friends that the facts set forth in the recent report of our trustiantly in the country of the facts of the fa

In the complaint, and satisfy foce as well as friends that the facts set forth in the recent report of our trustees are literally true.

So far from the company being instityent, the fact is that it owes no debts, and never has owed any; and there has never been a day since the opening of its lines when there have not been several hundred thousand dollars in its treasury.

Its business was never more prosperous than to-day, and its receipts have rapidly increased from the date of commencement up to this lime, and during the same time the receipts of the old companies have as rapidly diminished. The returns to the United States revenue officer show these facts. From them, as published it appears that the receipts of the Merchants Union for the single month of May just passed were greater than those ever earned by any Express Company in the same time, and wers within about $0.00 of the receipts of the American Express Company for the whole of last quarter, embracing January, February, and March, and for the month of March last were greater than the receipts of the United States and American Express Companies combined.

No company of its magnitude was ever managed

United States and American Express Companies combined.

No company of its magnitude was ever managed and operated with greater care and economy.

It is running more miles of line, and doing a larger business, and is better equipped, than any other express company in the United States; and its stock is without doubt intrinsically worth far more than that of any other express company.

Touching the "secret and clandestine" arrangement referred to, it is simply ridiculous, as well as recklessly and wantonly untrue.

The complaint will be answered at once, and the case forced to a trial at the earliest day.

Secretary of the Merchanta' Union Express Company.
