THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1867.

Our Platform for the Campaign. THE resolutions adopted yesterday by the Republican Convention furnish a declaration of the principles of the party which will meet the most hearty approval of all its members. They are carefully worded, and prepared with that consistent devotion to principle which has always marked the policy of the Republican party. When contrasted with the sentiments declared by our opponents, no one can fail to see the difference between the shifting. time-serving tone of the one and the high, manly opinions of the other. So far as we are concerned, there is no shifting of the responsibility, no craven sacrifice of right to policy. The issues are clearly defined; there can be no error in the reading of them, and no one can be deceived into supporting our candidate by the plea of ambiguity of language. Let us look at them in detail.

"First. That in the name of the nation, saved from treason, we demand security against its repetition by exacting from the vanquished such guarantees as will make treason so odious as to be forever impossible."

Here, in a few words, is contained the whole cause why the Republican party is determined not to readmit the South to power without guarantees. It is not that we desire personal position; it is not that we wish that the political machinery of the country should continue to be worked by our friends; but it is in order that "treason may be made so odious as to render it forever impossible.' It is for prevention, not punishment, that we are determined to adhere to our conditions submitted, if the next century opens before they are accepted.

"Second. That, as in the past we cordially justified the administration of Abraham Lin-coln in all necessary acts for the suppressing of rebellion, we record it as our judgment that the administration of Andrew Johnson bas been chiefly faituless because it has falled to try to gather up and fix in the organic and statute law the great principles which the war has settled, and without whose adoption as the rule of action peace is but a delusion

We find no bitter invective, no vulgar tirade against the President, but a calm reason why we deem that the Administration of Mr. Johnson "has been chiefly faithless." We are heartily glad that the Convention did not proceed to mention details. The instances are well known. It is needful that a judgment be given from the aggregate of the decisions of the Administration; and that judgment is adverse because, through shortsightedness and treachery, it has failed to embody in law what has been settled by facts-to make a statute out of the issue decided at Gettysburg, Petersburg, and Antietam.

The third resolution reads:-"That in the completion of the task of recon struction so firm as to be perpetual, it is indis-pensable that traitors beaten in the field shall not find a sanctuary in the courts;"

While the fourth expresses the opinion "That this Convention, speaking for the Republicans of Pennsylvania, unreservedly indorse the reconstruction measures of the Thirty-ninth and Fortieth Congresses as based upon sound principles, essentially just and wise, and promising an early, loyal, and permanent restoration of the Rebel States to their snare in the government of the Union; that we denounce and condemn the efforts of President Johnson, through his pliant Attorney-General and a majority of his Cabinet, to evade these laws by interfering to obstruct and prevent their enforcement in the spirit in which they were enacted, and that we call upon Congress, soon o meet, promptly and decisively to dispose of his new nullification."

In this fourth resolution is found the gist of the principles of the party. Congress is endorsed, and all who seek to evade it by legal quibbles and technicalities are derelict in their duty as public officers, and deserve the condemnation of all right-thinking citizens. If the present agitation throughout the country can be stopped, it should be done so by the assent of the whole country to the provisions of the Military Reconstruction bill. That law is backed by the great masses of the North, and it cannot be nullified. It therefore behooves all true men who desire tranquillity for themselves, henceforth to support that party which labors for the most speedy settlement of the question, by explicitly declaring that as soon as the law is carried into effect, and not till then, the "restoration of the Rebel States" will be secured.

The fifth resolution expresses that heartfelt endorsement of Generals Sickles and Sheridan which is entertained by all the loyal masses, and entertains the hope that General Grant will justify his past record by giving his assent to the actions of his subordinates. The sixth the wholesale pardoning system of the Administration. The seventh impresses on the people the necessity of having a majority of me Supreme Court of the State with political opinions adverse to those of the States Rights Democracy and the semi-Southern tendencies of the Democratic candidate. The ninth favors a free Railroad law. The tenth endorses Governor Geary. The eleventh attacks Secretary McCulloch for not promptly paying the bounties as provided for by Congress; and the twelfth endorses Judge H. W. Williams as a suitable candidate for the high post for which he has been nominated. The eighth resolution appears in both platforms;-"That protection being a cardinal feature of the Republican creed, we trust that such legis-lation will be secured at the earliest period as will afford adequate protection to American industry."

It seems idle for us to ask the attention of the people of Pennsylvania as to which party is the firmest friend of protection. It is almost an insult to their intelligence to exhibit the utter falsity of the assumed support of the Demo-issues to which they are at heart opposed, and the votes of their representatives in Congress attest that they will do all in their power to sacrifice Pennsylvania to the foreign element of which the great body of their party is composed. When the manufacturers and workingmen of Pennsylvania think of which party has ever been true to its pledges in their defense, we do not believe they will hesitate which shall receive their support. All the doctrines which we have thus briefly mentioned form each of them a solid plank; and when joined together by the spirit of enthusiasm with which they will be received, will form a platform capable of carrying our candidate to his seat on the Supreme Bench.

The Rival Nominations for Supreme Judge.

Ir would be much better if the choice of judicial officers could be kept out of politics. Had Judge Sharswood been neminated on his own personal character and qualifications for the office, aside from any political considerations, we should have felt like advising the Republicans to make no nomination, but to allow him to receive a practically unanimous support. But the managers of the Democratic party saw fit to couple his nomination with the enunciation of a platform which, in many respects, is totally repugnant to our ideas of right and justice, and which seems to have been made purposely offensive to liberalminded men of all parties. As the representative of this platform, as the standard-bearer of these principles, Judge Sharswood makes the race. Of course, under these circumstances, no consistent Republican can vote for him. To do so would be to give public indorsement to principles which are dangerous to the republic and an opprobrium to justice.

But one course was left open to the Republicans, and that was to make a party nomination. They have done so, and in the nomination of Judge Williams have placed before the people a candidate who, while possessing in an eminent degree the qualifications for an exalted juridical position, is also the representative of liberal and progressive principles. In voting for Judge Williams no man will be obliged to give a seeming endorsement to a platform at war with the first and plainest principles of justice.

And, considered specially with reference to a seat on the Supreme Bench, Judge Williams has some superior qualifications. He is in the prime of-life, and in the full and vigorous possession of all his powers. He has had sufficient experience to be familiar with the duties of the bench, and yet has not been a Judge so long as to fall into a perfunctory routine of official action.

Judge Sharswood, on the other hand, it seems to us, is liable to the very objections so ably set forth in Chief Justice Woodward's letter of declination, published some time since. Those objections commended themselves to the judgment of all thinking men. And if, on account of them, Justice Woodward felt that he would not be a suitable candidate, much less suitable must Judge Sharswood be. The term of office is a long one, and the man who enters upon it at an already advanced age must, in the course of nature, drop off before his term expires, or become, by reason of years and infirmities, practically unfitted for the proper performance of his important and arduous duties. We need a man in the very prime of life, who can endure severe study and labor, and who will bring to his duties the full vigor of his powers. These are practical considerations which must commend themselves to thoughtful men of all parties. They carry all the more weight since they have been so ably and authoritatively set forth by the Chief Justice whose term of office is about to expire.

Judge Sharswood's only hope of election lies in securing, on personal grounds, quite a large number of Republican votes. His party is in a minority of several thousand in the State. Under these circumstances, it was a very ungracious policy to put him upon a platform which is an insult to every true Republican, and which forced a partisan contest upon the people. We can only ascribe it to the bitter and implacable spirit of the managers of the party, who seem determined to make it carry the odium of as much political falsehood and folly as they can conveniently cram into its platforms. Whatever the motive, it has pretty effectually destroyed Judge Sharswood's chances of an election. He is more likely, on that platform, to lose the votes of many liberal-minded men of his own party, than he is to attract support from the Republicans.

Political Movements and their Causes. Political movements are not produced without cause. There is a motive behind the doings of prominent men. They act with reference to certain ends. We may, therefore, be sure that when President Johnson determined to nullify, as far as possible, the Reconstruction law, and to do so under the flimsy pretext of Attorney-General Stanbery's 'opinion," there was a powerful impelling motive of some sort for his action. He is not so blind as to fail to see the inconsistent attitude in which he places himself with his elaborate and repeated interpretation of this law on record in his veto messages-an interpretation diametrically opposed to his present position and proposed action. He must have anticipated many of the consequences which would result from his attempt to nullify the law. What, then, could have been his motive? What urged him on to his present course?

We believe it to have been purely partisan and political. He saw that under the practical operation of the Reconstruction law, as executed by Generals Sheridan, Sickles, Pope, Schofield, and Ord, a powerful Republican party was springing up, and threatening to become the dominant party in each of the oratic party of a high tariff. It is one of the late Rebel States. The faithful execution of the law would bring these States back into the Union, but they were likely to come back Republican States, and to vote as such in the Presidential election of 1868. It was the fear of this that led to Stanbery's manufacture of his "broad macademized road for perjury and fraud to travel on," in connection with registration, and to the denial to the different military commanders of all power or authority over the provisional officers of these districts. The President's action is merely a move on the political chess-board to head off the Republicans in the organization of their party in the Rebel States. And to do it he does not hesitate to nullify an important act of Congress. The game is a desperate one, and will hardly win. The reconstruction of the South may be delayed by it, but cannot be prevented. The will of the people in the long run must prevail. Probably Mr. Johnson thinks to change that will. If so, he is taking a very poor way to accomplish his end.

The Talked-of Public Buildings. On Tuesday a number of Councilmen met a number of the representatives of the various public associations of our city at the Mayor's office, to discuss the possibility of securing Penn Square as the site of the buildings of the associations. An able sketch of Penn Square was delivered by Hon. Eli K. Price, but with that exception it would seem that no conclusion was arrived at. The high character of the gentlemen interested lead us to hope that the plan will be vigorously pushed until the desired end is secured. Now that Broad street is fast becoming the finest thoroughfare in the country, if not in the world, it is but proper that the Governments, State and local, should aid it so far as lies in their power. The erection of such buildings as those proposed would greatly beautify the city, and give us just cause for pride. As it now stands, the four small squares at Broad and Market streets can hardly be called of any account to the city. Certainly, they are of no possible use to her.
