SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1867.

Shall the Republican Party be Sold Out? Jupus Luplow and his partisans seem determined to forestall matters, and to occupy the field at all hazards. The old call is repub. lished, together with a new one, and a meeting of his followers is to be held on Monday next to formally put him on the track. We have no doubt that many of the signers of that old call would now refuse to sanction the movement, and in any case would not support Judge Ludlow as against the regular nominee of the Republican party. The political situation, as it has developed itself during the last few months, and is now taking shape, proves daily the imperious necessity that rests upon all true Republicans to stand shoulder to shoulder, and so keep up the discipline and morale of the party. Public sentiment has changed since the call upon Judge Ludlow was first issued. Many Republicans who at that time felt disposed to support him as an independent candidate, are now satisfied that it would be altogether unwise to do so. The bitter, unprincipled, disgraceful personal warfare which is being waged upon Judge Williams, the Republican nominee for the Supreme Bench, by the organs of the Democratic party, has forfeited all claims upon the generosity of the Republican party which Judge Ludlow or any other Democrat could have. Forgery, fraud, inuendo, personal detraction, are the weapons which the Democrats are using to strike down one of the purest and ablest men in this State; and yet these same men turn round and ask Republicans to support an open and avowed Democrat like Judge ! Ludlow! We consider this whole movement, with all due respect to many estimable gentlemen who have been drawn into it, as nothing more nor less than a device of the Democratic leaders to secure the election of one of their own partisans by the aid of Republican votes. It is also calculated to assist the Democrats in their canvass for Judge Sharswood. They are trying the non-partisan dodge in his case, and the Ludlow movement is to play into their hands by strengthening that sentiment among Republicans. The whole thing is, at the bottom, a device of the enemy; and we warn the Republican masses to beware of it. We have the party strength in this city, with the right kind of a nomination, to elect a good sound Republican. Why not do it? Why give to the Democrats an official position of great power and influence?

Has the time for maintaining the Republican organization gone by? Look at the tremendous national contest which is looming up before us, and say if, as Republicans, we have any right to fritter away our strength and impair the integrity and working power of our organization? We say it, and say it emphatically, that we would rather have men who at this day can support the Democratic party in any other official position than on the bench-In no other place can they do the country and the cause of liberty and good government such irreparable injury.

And since Judge Ludlow is to be forced upon Republicans as a candidate worthy of their support, let us ask what use did he make of his official position and influence during our late great national struggle? What did he do for the Government and for the Union then? Where were his sympathies? Let our readers go back and study his record made in the Boileau case, and ask themselves if such a record is one that ought to be indersed by Republicans. If Republican support is to be claimed for this man, we want it should be bestowed intelligently.

The duty of the Republican Convention which is soon to assemble is plain, and that is to give us a good, sound, able Republican candidate,-not a mere figurehead or wooden man set up to be knocked down, and to play into the hands of Judge Ludlow, but a nominee that shall command the respect and support of the party. Such a man can be triumphantly elected, and his nomination will add strength to the entire Republican ticket. If we are sold out in this matter by the Convention, it will cost us thousands of votes.

We are utterly and implacably opposed to this whole scheme of demoralizing the Republican organization by going to the Democracy for judicial or any other candidates. We are in the midst of a great struggle for the permanent triumph of principles which we hold to be essential to the perpetuity and well-being of the nation. It is a struggle which has cost ns a vast expenditure of treasure and an appalling sacrifice of precious human life. Here is this Ludlow, and this Sharswood, both of whom are openly and bitterly opposed to us, who do not believe as we do, and who will use every particle of power and influence they may obtain in breaking down the very principles and policy which we are trying to establish. What possible claim have they upon our support? We utterly scout the idea that the one is the only man in this city fit to be put on the bench as Associate Judge, and the other the only man in the State quali fied to go on the Supreme Bench. Judge Williams is every way the peer of Judge Sharswood, and we have scores of Republican lawyers in this city who are as well qualified to sit upon the bench as is Judge Ludlow. Let us have done, then, with this coquetting with the enemy. We want neither the author of the legal-tender decision on the Supreme Bench, nor the author of the Boileau decision on the bench as the Associate Judge in this relations between the American Union and the Sublime Porte were completed, by the presentation of M. Blacque, the Turkish Envoy, to the President of the United States. As the speeches delivered on every such formal occasion are, by etiquette, prepared beforehand and read in manuscript, we must give the new Minister credit for a vein of dry humor seldom expected in an Ottoman Turk. The speech of M. Blacque was a model in its way. and its way is a remarkable one. In beginning he labors under the awkward dilemma of having to explain why, for thirty years, the courtesy shown by the United States in sending an ambassador to Censtantinople had never until now been reciprocated. It would never do, of course, to confess the truth, and acknowledge that the recent accrediting of the Greek Envoy Extraordinary was the occasion of the sluggish mind of the Sultan determining to honor us with a representative; that the fear of the influence of the United States being given in favor of Cretan freedom was the primary motive for this sudden determination. So, being unable to satisfactorily explain why it is, M. Blacque contents himself by saying that:-

"The idea of being represented near the head of the American Union, and of establishing with him more direct relations, is not of recent origin in the mind of the Sultan. This idea curred to him at the time he ascended the rone. Circumstances alone have thus far prevented him from putting it into execution, and thereby giving to a nation of whom he is equally the friend and admirer, the sincerest evidence of his sympathies."

This is certainly very gratifying, and can only be explained by the theory that the Turkish Cabinet, like other great bodies,

The desire, however, to conciliate the American people leads the Envoy to go yet further, and institute a comparison between Turkey and the United States. He tells us news when we find that he traces a striking resemblance. To be sure, we are a republic, with the most liberal views, enlightened policy, and democratic notions; and Turkey is an absolute despotism, contracted and intolerant in its dogmas, stagnant in progress, and intensely autocratic. We are a rising people, daily expanding. Turkey has been standing still, or rather decaying, for over four centuries. All the interests, habits, life, and morals of the two people are unlike; yet, with all these trifling differences, M. Blacque depicts points of resemblance. He says:-"Although separated by distances which, a few years since, could scarcely be measured or overcome, our two nations have more than one cause for mutual esteem. Both conquerors each has followed in its conquests the track traced for it by the manners and instincts of its epoch; one conquering by the force of arms, the other chiefly by the arts of peace. There is still one remarkable circumstance—perhaps not yet sufficiently understood in this quarter of the world, where, however, so much is known, namely—that these two nations differ but slightly in the principles on which their social organization is based. While, on the other hand, the extent of ocean which separates and divides them seems destined to keep them strangers to each other, on the other the democratic offinities of their institutions tend to draw them to one another,"

If we had any doubt before that when knowledge comes wisdom lingers, it would now be set at rest. Turkey, like the United States, a conquerer! Turkey democratic! Turkey with a similar social organization to ours! Why, we had labored under the delusion that Turkey had conquered nothing since the days of Solyman the Magnificent. We have misread history if the record of the Turkish Empire shows anything but defeat since the battle of Vienna, in 1683. Yet still, "both are conquerers!" Certainly the analogy is rather far-fetched. We perfectly agree with M. Blacque, that "there is one remarkable circumstance not sufficiently understood in this quarter of the world," and that is that Turkey and the United States "differ but slightly in the principles on which their social organization is based." This is news; and as Mr. Seward tells M. Blacque that "he is intimately acquainted with the people of the United States," we must take it for granted that we are Turks. We are afraid M. Blacque's ideas of our morality are derived from the sensational style of literature. It is a mistake for him to suppose that the Ottoman system of conjugal relations is general, and that it prevails throughout the Union.

No, M. Blacque, we have not yet established harems, and as our principles are decidedly in favor of a single spouse, we entertain a hope that Turkey is also about to abandon polygamy. We are also rather inclined to doubt the "democratic institutions" of the Sublime

The President's reply, written by Mr. Seward, is rather too cordial for an address to the oppressor of the Cretan Christians. At the same time it contains several significant passages. He justly remarks that "we thought it unfortunate for the Turkish Government, rather than for ourselves, that it delayed so long to reciprocate our mission."

And near the conclusion of the address he gently hints to the Envoy that our sympathy is with Crete. He says:-

"It is not unknown in Turkey or elsewhere that the people of the United States freely lend their sympathies and moral support to the cause political reformation throughout the world. Congress and the Executive, and all departments of our Government, indeed, are in harmony on this subject.

Taking it all together, we think there is a good deal of the comic in this interview. A representative of a despotism professes to represent a democracy, while our republic smiles and welcomes bim, while at the same time our most heartfelt wishes tend to see the power he represents humbled and crushed by its rebel subjects. Truly, in diplomatic circles words do not convey ideas.

PUBLISH IT .- It is conceded on all hands now that some pretty energetic correspondence has passed between President Johnson and General Grant, both in regard to the suspension of Secretary Stanton and the removal of General Sheridan. We know of no documents that the people would read with greater interest than those which form this correspondence. Let us have it.

To BE Noted .- Parties who have invested in Government bonds, as well as all persons who are holding either national bank notes or greenbacks, would do well to keep an eye on the doctrines advanced by the Democratic party. In Ohio Vallandigham and Pendleton are openly advocating what amounts to simple repudiation. In this State the Democrats are endeavoring to put a man on the Supreme bench who has already decided that greenbacks are not lawful money. Business men, and all who value their own interests above the triumph of desperate and abandoned demagogues, should make a note of these facts.

Suffering in a Militia Camp in Massachusetts. THREE THOUSAND VISITORS BENAIN ALL NIGHT IN A

Boston, August 22.—About three thousand visitors who went from this city to the encampment of the 1st Brigade in Hull yesterday, were obliged to spend the night in camp. A terrible storm prevailed all night, and there was much suffering among the women and children, who were without shelter. There is much indignation expressed towards the captains for the various Hull beats for retusing to make extra trips and bring the visitors to their homes last evening, and Captain Allen, of the Emelice, has been arrested, and will be brought before the Governor to explain his conduct. A large number of Stateconstables have been on the camp grounds and selzed a large quantity of liquor, and placed in limbs those engaged in selling it. BAIN STORM
