Judge Kelley in Missouri. From the St. Louis Democrat

After war reconstruction. The smoke of battle scarcely has rolled away when we see the surgeons binding the wounds and repairing the iosses of the conflict. He who passes over the battle-field another season will find that the bones of the slain and the wrecks and tragments of the contest are already half concealed the battle-field another season will find that the bones of the slain and the wrecks and tragments of the contest are already half concealed by the springing grass and fragrant flowers and the luxuriant vegetation with which nature hastens to hide the traces of destruction. Bearcely has the war, in its broader sense, reached its close; scarcely have we settled its results when the minds of all true statesmen are turned to the work of restoring the material prosperity of the country. And among those who have most promptly turned their attention to this task the Hon, W. D. Kelley, with his wide range of information, his originality of thought, and his eloquence of speech, stands among the foremost.

His address has doubtless been appreciated by our renders as one of surpassing interest and importance. Treating of subjects already too long neglected in the excitement of a contest spon the questions involving the very existence of the nation, it meets, with a wealth of facts and a force of reasoning not often equalled, the popular demand for information upon the needs and duties of the immediate fature. It was an admirable speech, instructive as well as interesting, and, to those who have regarded Mr. Kelley as a man of narrow range of thought, the apostic of one idea, the champion of negro suffrage, it may prove somewhat surprising in its thorough knowledge of the material resources and full appreciation of the industrial needs and interests of all settions of the country, and especially of our own State.

We need not say that we agree most heartily with Judge Kelley upon the necessity of diversifying the industry of the Northwest—it has been the burden of our immediation, day after day, ever since the war ended. The result of the war most quickly and most surely foreseen in the Northwest, was that the South would become self-sustaining, at least so far as agricultural products are concerned. With slavery, and especially and most surely foreseen in the Northwest, was that the South would become self-sustaining, at the war most quickly and most surely foreseen in the Northwest, was that the South would become self-sustaining, at least so far as agricultural products are concerned. With slavery, the great plantations pass out of existence; the culture of great staples ceases to be the almost exclusive employment of Southern capital, the new condition of things creates a new population and a new class of land-holders—the immigrants and the freedmen—and to them the capital is wanting to carry on the culture of sugar and cotton upon so large a scale as to make it profitable. A South raising her own agricultural products will inevitably raise more than enough for her own consumption from a soil of unequalled richness, and if wheat can be shipped to New York or Europe from Dubuque, lowa, by way of New Orleans, cheaper than it can by rail or the lakes, any man can see that it can be shipped from New Orleans or Mobile cheaper than it can from Dubuque or St. Louis. Between us and our market for agricultural products there springs up a competitier, with power eventually to supply the whole demand. What must the Northwest do? We must create a market and a demand at home. We must so diversify our industry that the surplus products of agriculture shall not be iorced to travel all the way to New York or Liverpool to find a consumer. We shall not be forced to travel all the way to New York or Liverpool to find a consumer. We must make Missouri the manufacturing centre of the world. Nature has poured out before us with lavish profusion all the needed resources. The decay of industries in England places at our disposal skilled labor of almost every kind. We need only the enterprise and combined effort to bring the labor to the natural resources, and Missouri will become the work-bar of the continent and the market for the shop of the continent and the market for the Northwest.

Northwest.

Very many of Judge Kelley's facts and suggestions are new and important. The information which he gives in regard to the culture of the beet in Europe will attract the attention of farmers and agricultural societies in every part of the Northwest, and will lead, we trust, to thorough experiments and a full investigation of a subject promising such startling results. For it would have startled any man six years ago if he had been told that, after the drums ago if he had been told that, after the drums had ceased to beat, the Northwest should supply Louisiana with sugar. Starling as the change may seem, we may remember that this is the day of startling changes. The marvellous revolution effected in the industry of France and other European countries by the sugar manufacture, more than justifies the hope that this country, raising its own sugar, may save over forty millions in gold every year.

Missouri and the whole Northwest need manufactures. The recoller realizes the need of them. Louisiana with sugar. Starling as the chan nfactures. The people realize the need of them, but they have not all learned to believe, with Mr. Kelley, that a high protective tariff is neocssary to secure them. There are many who believe that a very different tariff is required to sustain manufactures at the seaboard, or even in Pennsylvania, from that which would be most beneficial to Missouri or other Western States, where the cost of transportation from the sea shore constitutes a permanent and considerable protection in addition to the duties siderable protection in addition to the duties imposed by Government. Doubtless, public opinion is moving steadily towards a tariff wisely adjusted for the development of our re-sources and the diversification of our indussources and the diversification of our industries, but such a complication of tariffs and internal taxes as we have witnessed within the past few years does not seem to be calculated to benefit our own country, or to increase the immigration from foreign lands. The central fact in the tariff discussion seems to us to be this—that we are forced to protect our debt, if not our industry. Free trade, or anything like it, means repudiation. With an absolute necessity for levying a heavy revenue tariff, we have also, as yet, internal taxes which so burden labor and cramp home manufacture, as to neutralize in a great measure the effect of the tariff. The manufacturer whose product is protected by a duty of sixty per cent, on foreign importations is not protected at all if internal taxes so increase the cost of labor, of the raw material, and of his operations, that his product increases sixty, or even lorey per cent. in cost, Internal taxes upon articles or increases sixty, or even forty per cent. In cost.

Internal taxes upon articles, or the manufacture of articles that can be imported, are simply tariffs against our own, and in favor of foreign labor. To "protect American industry," then, ent down the taxes upon that industry or its

These views we urged most earnestly during These views we urged most earnestly during the last session of Congress, and in some important respects the legislation of that session was wisely directed to reduce the burdens on industry. Much more may be done in the same direction. And when we have taken the load from our own labor, we can then ascertain much more nearly what adjustment of tariff is best calculated to secure it against foreign competition, and to develop those vast resources to which such speeches as that of Judge Kelley directs attention.

General Sherman at a Circus.

General Sherman at a Circus.

The Indian Commissioners who have been journeying on the Upper Missouri in search of peace, returned to Omaha, Nebraska, on the lith instant, and in the evening went to the circus, in company with General Sherman. An incident of the occasion is thus related by the correspondent of the Chicago Tribunc:

The Generals defied slowly in, and took seats on the left. While thus sitting and walting, up steps an unknown individual and expresses his delight at meeting General Sherman.

The General-I don't recognize you. Stand in the light.
The Unknown-My name is King. I have

The Unknown—My name is King. I have served three years in your army.

The General—Yes, yes. What are you doing now? What's your business?

Mr. King (formerly the Unknown)—Well, I am in the clown business. I am the clown business. I am the clown basiness are not the pleasure of appearing before you to-night.

The General—Ah, indeed! Glad you are doing so well.

Mr. King—Your presence here is a great card, General. We shall have an immense house. These seats are not the best; come this way.

So he rescaled them still further to the left, and then proposed to get them chairs, which offer was declined.

Mr. King—General, I should like presently to introduce you to our ladies.

The General—Yes, certainly. (Aside)—I have to humor my soldiers.

Precently reappears King from behind the scenes, holds up his beckoning finger, and says:

"This way, if you please, General Sherman."

The General pleased, and plunging into the secret recesses of the canvas green-room, was lost to sight for ten minutes, and returned to the infant prodigy, La Belle Equestrienne, and several other world happier by the acquaintance of the infant prodigy, La Belle Equestrienne, and several other worlds.
