The process pursued by Niepce is essentially the same as that suggested by Becque-rel and Poitevin. It is, in fact, the old daguerreotype process with a few modifications. The silver plate is rendered sensitive by being placed in a bath of some hypochlorite. The thin film of chloride of silver which forms on the surface is partly fused before the exposure Trenck, with his hair prematurely grey, his body curved with the weight of sixty pounds of is made. After the first exposure it is heated and once more put into the camera. Such a method would be highly fatiguing for a living subject, but immaterial for an inanimate one. There are technical precautions to be observed, the details of which are given in the published articles of Niepce. There would appear to be no doubt about the possibility of photographing colors. The specimens exhibited were conclusive on that point. But now comes the unfavorable side of and shaking with the palsy; a form that tot-tered with feebleness, joined to limbs that, through contortion and disease, were scarce able to perform their office. THE OLDEST PERSON KNOWN .--- A colored woman, Mrs. Flora Stuart, of Londonderry, N. H., the Manchester American says, is the oldest person known in the United States. She was born in Boston in 1750, and consequently is twenty-six years older than the Declaration of American Independence. As she tells the story, her father and mother, when she was three months old, came into the possession of the Simpson family of Windham, N. H., as slaves, and remained with them until after the abolition of slavery in that State. She called her maiden name after that of her master's family, Simpson. She has lived in Rockingham county, in the towns of Windham, Londonderry, and Candia, from her childhood. Long ago she was left a widow, and has now living two sons and a daughter that interview ! It lasted for several hours, and was consecrated to mutual tears. The past, the present, and the future were dis-iron, which for ten years had hung suspended from it, his features changed by grief-this, then, was the man who, in his youth, was so remarkable for manly beauty, and whose image she had so faithfully preserved ! He, on the other hand, beheld in her for whom he had suffered so much a female who, like himself, was prematurely old: a head entirely bald, theirs !

In this moment of trial, the resolution of Amelia proved superior to the courage of Trenck. She so conducted the interview as to make it serve the purpose of diverting, for the time, their mutual sorrows. She inquired particularly after his situation, and as to the nature of his present resources and future hopes, and offered him pecuniary assistance, which he accepted. In this spirit they separated, to see each other no more in this world. Trenck married shortly after, and of this marringe the following very interesting anecdote is told. It was during a brief residence at Aix In Chapelle that he made the acquaintance of a baron, who was burgomaster of the town, and had several daughters. Trenck fell in love with the youngest, about eighteen, exseedingly pretty and amiable. He demanded and obtained her in marriage. A gayety of temper natural to the lady having, however, occasioned some censures to be passed on her conduct, her husband, on the evening of their marriage, gave a striking preof of his origi-nality of character. When every one had re-tired to rest, and the bride and bridegroom had entered their apartment, the latter locked the door, took up a pistol, and said:-"I am acquainted, madame, with the reports that have been circulated respecting your reputation-is but just I should be acquainted also how far these reports are well founded therefore, choose whether you will make me a generous confession, or perish by my hand." The poor bride, confused and trembling, wept, lamented, and implored the pity and forbearance of her husband; but in vain. He was inexorable, and to her prayers to spare her life, only answered:-----'Let me have a generous confession, with no omissions, no reservations, or receive your death at my hands." He persevered so absolutely that she was at length obliged to enter on the confession required. When she had confessed all, Trenck, laying down his pistol, said to her :-"Madame, you were ignorant of my true character; if you had known it, you would have entered into no engagement with me; consequently, I should not have been entitled to the avowal now made me. As this is the case, I have no reproach to make, nor will I apbraid you for what has passed. What I wished for was to try if you were capable of telling the truth. This experiment has afforded me convincing proof of your veracity, and I am satisfied. Now that I know you are possessed of sincerity and ingenuousness of heart in the falness of mine I promise you the tenderest, the sincerest affection."

The lady was delighted, and they lived happily together, she bearing him many children. But in an evil hour for himself, his restless spirit drew him towards Paris, just at the time the Reign of Terror was at its height. It was not long before the bloodhounds of the Conwention were upon his track; and one bright summer afternoon the prisoner of Madgebourg, the lover of Amelia, found himself in the creaking tumbril that was hurrying a few more unfortunates to the guillotine. His fortitude and endurance, tried so often, did not desart him not desert him. He spoke words of good cheer to his companions in misery; he joked with the railing crowd that accompanied the doomed to their place of punishment; he part of Daguerre and the elder Niepce, before they succeeded in fixing the image on the silver plate, we can take courage and confidently anticipate the final success of this branch of art.

Protesser Charles A. Seely remarked upon the great beauty of the specimens exhibited by the Chairman, and stated that they were superior to any he had ever seen, and indicated a decided improvement upon the earlier pictures by M. Niepce. Professor Seely spoke of the labors of Becquerel in the same direction, and was disposed to give him the credit for having originated the method since employed by photographers in colors. He also stated that colored pictures had been taken in this country ten or fifteen years ago by a Mr. Hill. They could not, however, be fixed, and the further prosecution of the art had been suspended since the death of the inventor. Hill wrote a considerable volume on heliochromic pictures, which was sold at a high price, but is now out of print. There was at one time considerable talk of securing an appropriation from Congress to enable Mr. Hill to carry on his researches, but no success attended the movement. Mr. Cameron, of Ohio, also published articles on color pictures in Humphrey's Journal of Photography. There seems to be no doubt that colors can be pho tographed, or rather daguerreotyped; but how to fix them has not yet been discovered.

The President also exhibited a very fine specimen of photo-relief engraving, which he had received from the inventor, Mr. Woodbury, whom he found engaged in perfecting his process in Paris. By this method an ordi nary negative is taken; of this a gelatine copy is made, which is transferred to soft metal type by means of a powerful hydraulie press, clicht is thus formed which affords the printing surface. The ink is a solution of gelatine properly colored; this is poured hot upon the surface of the plate, and a piece of paper is gently pressed upon it. After the gelatine sets it adheres to the paper and forms the picture. The picture is a cast of the metallic cliché, but is so thin that it is impossible to feel or see the relief. Plaster casts of the pictures formed on the metallic plates were also exhibited. These casts could be electrotyped, and thus the most delicate microscopical subjects could be printed, or, in fact, any object can be copied.

Mr. Woodbury's process differs somewhat from the photo-lithographic method pursued by Mr. Osborne, though both use the action of light upon gelatine mixed with bichromate of potash. In the one case we have metallic plates, and in the other stone for the printing surface. Both of these methods are capable of extensive application, and ought to be better understood by the publishers of illustrated books and magazines. Some very fine micro-photographs taken by Mr. Arnold were ex-hibited to the society.

-M. Thuillier, principal editor of the Courier de l'Algérie, and M. Ferrouillat, director rier de *P*Algéris, and M. Ferrouillat, director of the same journal, were recently tried at the Court of Correctional Police of Algiera, on a charge of spreading false news and exciting hatred and contempt of the Government, and were both acquitted. The public prosecutor appealed to the Imperial Court of Algiers against that verdict, and this latter tribunal has now condemned the two editors to fines of 300 frames and 200 frames respectively. 300 france and 200 france respectively.

-The Gazette des Etrangers announces that Prince Achille Murat has resigned his commission as sub-lieutenant in the Eighth Hussars.

-It may be hard for people who do read the infamous paper published by the brute Pomeroy (La Crosse Democrat), to be lieve that the following is really the expres sien of any Northern newspaper. Nevertheles it came from the sheet named, and is entitled to notice because the Democrat is a great favorite with its party. It says:---
