GREAT SNOW STORM IN CONNECTICUT.

Damage to Telegraph Wires and Fruit Trees—The First Touch of Winter.

The first touch of winter, experienced on Tuesday, must hereafter rank among the remarkable storms, and will doubtless be long remembered and quoted on account of its extraordinary suspension of telegraphic communication in this vicinity. The fall of snow was unusually large for this season, and although a frost, owing to the storm, began, one it fell, yet on Wednesday morning some five or six inches remained on the ground, and a few adventurous people brought out their cutters and essayed sleighing.

The dampness and stickiness of the snow caused it to cling to branches of trees, telegraph wires, and similar objects, and they were heavily laden with the frozen mass during the whole of Wednesday. Many fruit and shade trees were broken down by the superabundant weight, and others were badly injured by the breaking down of the limbs.

But by far the most serious damage done was to the telegraph lines; not merely in the matter of the expense which will be necessary to put them in good working order again, but also in the injury which business of all kinds must suffer for want of telegraphic facilities. Never before was the value of the telegraph so fully appreciated by our citizens, and particularly our business men, as during the paralysis of Wednesday. At an early hour on Tuesday evening the lines, which had been working badly all day, owing to the storm, began, one after another, to give out entirely, and by 10 o'clock not a wire could be made to speak.

On Wednesday morning the line men began their investigations of the trouble, and found enough to keep them busy for some time. In this city, all the wires were found to be more or less sagged and "crossed" by their load of ice, and in many places the poles supporting them were prostrated from the same cause. More especially was this the case in the north part of the city. The poles of the Western Union Company from the tunnel to the junction of the Hartford, Providence, and Fashill Railroad, with the branch track of the Hartford and New Haven to the freight house on the rock, were all down, one being broken short off at the surface of the ground.

The big pole at the "junction" supporting over thirty wires, was prostrated across the track, and as for the cable company's wires, Fishkill road, occasional prostrated or leaning poles could be seen. Of course the wires near the junction were broken, tangled, twisted, crossed, and grounded in the most unpropitious manner, and the line men appeared to have no special pleasure in their job. The wires of the Western Union, in their fall, laid directly across those of the Franklin line, which were badly strained by their weight.

The view of the wreck from this point was desolate enough, as more wires centre here than any place in this vicinity, and nearly all were badly "burr up." Down town the frame on the roof of the building corner of Pearl and Main, supporting the Franklin company's wires, was overthrown, and the wires badly mixed and sagged. Those of the Western Union, across Main street, were in nearly as bad condition. From all directions, engineers of incongruous trains report serious trouble with the wires. At 8 o'clock a telegraph pole fell directly across the track, and the wires had to be cut to allow of the removal of the wreck for the passage of traffic.

In the midst of this desert of electrical stagnation, one bright oasis remains. South of the city can be reached by the telegraph, communication with that metropolis having been re-established last afternoon. Of what account is the Atlantic cable when compared with the Connecticut river? What care we for Garibaldi's movements or the prospect of impalement, when we can hear that all is quiet in South Gastonbury? And of what importance are quotations from London and New York, when we can place before our readers the closing prices of potatoes at the first and second boards, and the street sales too, in South Gastonbury? At any rate let us be thankful that we can still telegraph somewhere. Detentions to trains from the storm were not numerous or serious. The evening train on the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill Railroad got stopped by the snow in the narrow double track north of Boston Station, and was obliged to back up and take a fresh start before it could overcome the obstacle. The horse cars in the city were obliged to put on double teams Wednesday morning, and to run less often than usual, owing to the snow on the tracks.

LOSERS BY THE FALL IN COTTON.—The rise and fall of cotton affects nearly equally all parts of the civilized world. In Normandy the manufacturer has lost three million francs by the fall in this staple.

RAILWAYS IN INDIA.—Through communication by railway between Calcutta and Bombay, according to a Kurrachee paper, was to be opened on the 10th instant. The journey will occupy 23 days.

ARMY OVERCOATS.
