THE ROMAN QUESTION. Great Bebate in the French Corps Legislatif-M. Jules Favre Creates an Intense Excitement. After the great speech by M. Rouher on the Roman Question, in the French Corps Legislatif, M. Jules Favre once more arose and Gentlemen, when my colleagues and myself Gentlemen, when my colleagues and myself presented a demand for interpeliations, it was to draw from the Government explicit declarations. To meet that, the honorable Minister has been precise, but there is one point to which I wish to call the attention of the Chamber, involving, as it does, an inconsistency in the proceedings of the Government. The task so valiantly accepted by the Ministers is not the same as that which they took upon themselves in 1862. The Moniteur is there to attest the fact that in that year our occupation in the capital that in that year our occupation, in the opinion of the Emperor, could not be any longer main-tained, and our ambassador at Rome declared that it was become sitogether impossible. (Noise.) From that impossibility appains the Convention of September, as the Government hoped that the Holy Father, remaining faceto face with Italy, would come to an understanding with her. From 1849 to 1864 the Government explained its intervention by the hope of obtaining liberal conversions from the Heri ment explained its intervention by the hone of obtaining liberal concessions from the Holy Father; and as it was not successful we withdrew in 1806. Well, I say that the situation has changed entirely. I said to you the other day that the difference between the Austrian and French action was that the former was submissive, and the latter gave advice. To day our intervention will be inevitably stamped with absolute submission to the Holy Father. (Noise.) You havegot out of a difficult position. According to the words of a venerable prelate with absolute submission to the Holy Father. (Noise.) You have got out of a difficult position. According to the words of a venerable prelate, it was not possible either to advance or recoil, You have recalled, and made France do so likewise. (Renewed noise.) When I say that the Government of the Holy Father is in opposition to modern liberty, I use the terms of the Emperor's letter. He had hoped to bring about a conciliation between Liberalism and the Pope. The Government has now lost that hope, and, therefore submits to the Holy Father. (Marks of dissent.) It pronounces clearly that it will defend the Pope in every case. At present the French Government is in the face of an Italian Cabinet, which it declares to be composed of moderate men, and to whose policy it gives its adhesion. What is that policy? You have only to cast your eyes on the circulars of General Menabrea to see that the possession of Rome is declared indispensable to Italy. (Interruption.) There is another point which the Minister of State has not touched. He has spoken of the mark of deference which the Holy Fathet has given us in consenting to participate in the Conference without condition. Can be say that the Holy See accepts the compromise which French policy would wish to establish? (Noise.) You are going to pass a vote of confidence, as in the affairs of Germany and Mexico. It will nave the same fate, (Murmurs.) As for us, we ask, what are the means by wnich you propose to attain the object pursued? Providence and time are invoked. That is

As for us, we ask, what are the means by which you propose to attain the object pursued? Providence and time are invoked. That is holding puerile language unworthy of a great nation and a great assembly. (Fresh interruptions.) I do not say that the Government of France is not strong enough to force its will ou Italy; but I do say it pursues a chimera when it hopes to obtain the renunciation of the vote of 1861. Italian unity has been attributed to the House of Savoy. Without going back to Machiavelli and Dante, the principal inspirer during the present century has been the Pontiff who now obstructs it. He it was who sounded in Italy the cry for deliverance; he it was who roused the structs it. He it was who sounded in Italy the cry for deliverance; he it was who roused the courage of the Italians. (Murmurs.) I desire to see a conciliation, but I see no more probability now than in 1849 and 1864, for this reason, that neither Italy nor the Holy See will abandon their pretensions. Thence this consequence arises, that our occupation will be indefinite. We shall spend there twenty-five milions a year; we shall lock up an army and fleet which under certain circumstances would be tions a year; we shall lock up an army and fleet which under certain circumstances would be valuable elsewhere. You compromise not only the dignity of France, but you mark with the brand of policy a cause which ought to find its strength higher than in arms. (Noise; Vote, vote!) Well, if you will not hear me, gentlemen, vote. (The honorable member descended from the tribune.)

The President—I recall M. Jules Favre to the tribune, and I beg the Chamber to preserve the attentive attitude which it has hitherto done. (Hear, hear.)

(Hear, hear.)
M. Jules Favre reascended the tribune amid laughter on some benches, and said—Gentlemen, this may appear amusing to you; I find it sad enough. We are men, and ought not to act

The President-I cannot allow the last w to pass unnoticed. The Chamber does not act as M. Favre describes. But at the end of a debate solong and an attention so sustained, when convictions are formed, it is natural that the chamber should experience some lassitude. (Hear, hear.)
M. Jules Favre, descending from the tribune
—Then let it repose!
M. Glais-Bizoin—It is not lassitude; it is ill rill. (Noise.) The President—I must notice the word which

M. Glais-Bizoin has just pronounced. I am bound to state that, on the contrary, during the whole of this debate the Chamber has shown how anxious it was that the discussion should how anxious it was that the discussion should be full and free. (Hear, hear.) In proof of my assertion, I am willing to allow M. Glais-Bizoin to speak if he wishes. (Laughter.) M. Glais-Bizoin—I appeal to the loyalty of the President. A few days since he said that it would be necessary to place some one near M. Glais-Bizoin to take down his words. Does not justice require that he should also place another, reporter at the centre and right of this Cham-ber, whence incessant interruptions have arisen since our friend Jules Favre appeared in the tribune? I do not complain of the President applying the regulation to me, but I have a right to demand reciprocity for the members of the majority.

M. Nogent Si. Laurens—Mere trade jealousy.

The President—I have not heard from the side.

right to demand reciprocity for the members of the majority.

M. Nogent Si. Laurens—Mere trade jealousy. The President—I have not heard from the side you designate the interruptions of which you complain. (Dissent on some benches.) There may have been certain murmurs, but no interruption has drowned the words of the speaker. (True, true.)

Mr. Chesnelong—The interpellation which my friends and myself addressed to the Government had three objects—to thank it for the intervention at Rome, to tell it that we saw in that step a gauge of the direction which it will imprint on the negotiation, and, lastly, to give to the Government he assistance of a vote of this Chamber. After the speech of the Minister of State and the explicit declarations made by him, to the effect that the French Government would never permit Italy to seize Rome or the present Pontifical territors; that if any new international act intervenes, the past conduct of the Government gives the certified that it will not permit the guarantees of the Holy Father's security to be weakened; and that if there is no new convention, that of September shall subsist in its integrity—considering these declarations, we have only thanks to address to the Government, and withdraw our demand for interpellation. (Great applause. "Yote, yote.")

M. Berryer—One word, gentlemen. I feel the Government, and withdraw our demand for interpellation. (Great applause. "Vote, vote.")

M. Berryer—One word, genilemen. I feel bound to say that I am very happy to find my self in perfect accord with the sentiment of the immense majority of the Chamber. (Hear, hear.) This manifestation will resound throughout Europe. Why should not the sentiment which inspires us be brought to the knowledge of the Government under the form of referring to it the demand for interpellation? (Various movements.) I hear it said that this step would have the character of distrust. I do not see why. (Noise.)

The President—I am obliged to remind the Hon. Deputy that, the demand for interpellation being withdrawn by its authors, by the terms of the rules, it cannot be submitted to the Chamber. (Various movements.)

M. Berryer—It seems to me that the act has not yet been completed by the President. But as we have obtained formal and positive declarations, without ambiguity, from the Minister, I shall not press the point.

M. Rouher—One observation, gentlemen, to show that the vote of the Order of the Day pure and simple is the only means the Chamber has to manifest its accord with the Government. If the declarations made by the Government had neither satisfied the authors of the interpeliation nor the Chamber, the vote would have sent the demand to the examination of the Government, and that step would have proved the disaccord. Therefore it is not possible to have recourse to the same means to prove perfect accord. It is in conformity with all parliamentary precedents to manifest the agreement of the Chamber and Government by voing the Order of the Day pure and simple. ("Yes, yes!" "Yote, vote!"

M. Gueroult ascended the tribune. ("Vote, vote!" "The close, the close!" Noise.)

M. Berryer—Before pronouncing the close of the debate, permit all honest consciences to solace themselves. (Various movements.) I have only two words to reply to the Minister to show the perfect lovalty of my intentions. ("Speak, speak!") In the existing st ody has not the right of voting the order of the day, assigning its reasons (Various movements.) We are asked to vote the Order of the Day, pure and simple. I say that it is not possible. I have listened to the developments of the other interpellation, that of M. Jules Favre, and I have understood its scope. Well, in my conscience—let the authors grant me entire freedom of language—I condemn it. Can I, then, confound in the same vote two demands, of which I approve one and reject the other? (Various movements. "Vote, vote!" "The close, the close the close the conset!"

(Various movements. "Vote, vote!" "The close, the close!")

M. Gueroult, from the tribune—I ask to speak on the position of the question. (Numerous voices—"The close! The close!")

The President—The close is demanded. I am going to put it to the vote, unless you are going to speak against it.

M. Gueroult—I shall do so. I wish to support in four words the conclusions of M. Berryer. (Interruption.)

The President—It is against the close that you have to speak.

The President—It is against the close that you have to speak.

M. Gueroult—It is in the interest of all that the situation should be perfectly clear. (Fresh noise, and cries of "The close!") It would be logical that the question should be put as it just has by M. Berryer. ("Vote, vote!") Gentlemen, it was not on the classing that I wished to speak, but on the position of the question.

question.
The President—I put the closing of the debate The close was pronounced.

M. Haeijens—We demand that the proposition of M. Berryer should be put to the vote.

(Noise.) M. Gueroult-I ask to support. (Interrup-The President-I consult the Chamber on the question of the Order of the Day, pure and

The Order of the Day, so announced, was agreed to by 237 to 17.

The Chamber being consulted, decided that Monday should be the day. The proceedings then terminated.
