Both General Wool and Govern Seymour were passengers on the same tra to Ealem, but did not meet until arriving to Salem, but did not meet until arriving the depot in that place. Governor Seymo accosted the General very politely, and offere his hand, which he (General Wool) offe-elvely relused. The affair created consider able remark at the time, and drew forth son strictures, even from Republicans, on the grouty General's want of etiquette. On retur ing to Albany, the train was met at Cambrid by a large crowd, and Wool was loudly cheer but when some sanguine Democrat called cheers for Seymour, groans were given inste-All this General Wool enjoyed hugely. Murder upon Impulse.

The singular story which follows, and wh taken from a recent number of the Long News, furnishes an additional case for the sta of psychologists:--

"Gunner Berjamin Sheldon, who was han at Lucknow for having shot and killed Bom Wall, made a strange confession. day of the murder he had been led by the ki ness of his friends' to drink to excess. 'In evening,' he says, 'I must have been at roll-c although I do not recollect it; and the f thing I do recollect, after leaving the canto when it was closed, was finding myself at cot of Corporal Wall, with a carbine in hand. I cannot tell whether Corporal Wall v asleep or awake. It was then, as in a mome not remember discharging the carbine, speaking to any one; but my next consci moment was, when I was being handcuffed the guard-room, as one of the handcuifs nip me. It was not until the next morning, w I was told of what had happened, that the cumstance of having been at Corporal Ws cot flashed upon me."

Charles O'Neill, who gave a brief sketch of the career and success of General Grant, and asserted his capability of performing the duties of the office of President of the United States if elected. He said that the Democrats of to-day were decrying him, and yet, as far back as 1865, they wished to obtain him as their candidate; but those who knew him were satisfied that he could never stand upon their 'platform. The speaker concluded amid applause.

I am at present endeavoring to render myself useful in this campaign where help is most needed, and if I can contribute anything to the success of the Republican cause in this crisis, my wishes will be amply satisfied."
