From the Planters' Banner. Franklin, La., before the murder of Sherif Pope.

The grand radical meeting near Franklin last Baturd-y was almost a fizzle. Only one hundred and twenty five nearness attended. The colored procession through the town was a poor concern. They squaked out three faint cheers for Pope, got brick batted, and left town appairently dishestrened and forlorn. That was Pope's funeral procession. Colored people of St. Mary, we assore you that this fellow, Pope, is bing to you, and deceiving you in a variety of ways. He is only tere to influence the next elect! In. He has no idea of being able to hold the office of Sheriff. He is paid now for cheating you and lying to you by the radical party. He couldn't pay his board bill at the hole were I not for funds he gets from the radicals at New Oriesns or Washington. If you allow yourselves to be looled and cheated by his lies, go ahead to the bitter end. When he involves you in trouble by his taik in your Layai League Chubs, he will fee to the woods and to New Orieans, and leave you to be dealt with as the negroes of St. Landry were lately. The St. Landry Progress promised the negroes of that parish great things, told them how strong they were, flattered them, fled to them as the negroes are lied to in this parish, and secretly planned to burn down Opeloussa and Washington, and to plunder both places. These carpetbeggers were to lead the negroes in the figure. What was the result? At the fire of the first gun the leaders took to the woods, and the negroes were ruthlessly slaughtered by the enraged white people all over the parish. The linamous carpet baggers are to blame for the whole sacrifice of life produced by tueir lies and deceptions in St. Landry, * * * Some outrageous acts of some of the worst of these negroes would in the end justify the white people in killing twenty or thirry of the misled negroes, and running the his liver don't act; he has the coile, the teethache, and the yellow jaundice, and don't feel

Grand Choleau Correspondence of the Planters Banner.

The next meeting was to have taken place at 7 o'clock P. M., the next day; but id about 12 o'clock M. on that very day came the ominous report that the radicals and Democrats were fighting at Opelousas; that the radicals wanted to burn Opelousas, and kill every Democrat in it; that their couriers were running in every direction in the parish to summon them there, and the Democra's were calling on their brethren for succor. A scene ensued, Mr. Elitor, which it is hardly possible to describe; it was a general rush to arms, going and coming to and from, saddling up of horses, mounting and riding, clouds of dust raised up in the roads by troops of armed riders coming in from the country to rendezvous here ere they started for Opelousas, guns discharged to be reloaded; women and children running from one house to another with pallid cheeks; here a hurried embrace between a mother and son, or a husband and wife. But they start—their forms are soon hid in the clouds of dust which rise from under their horses feet. There were about 15 N or 2000 men under arms—all that could have arms were on duty, all mounted. There was a conflict between the Democrats and radicals, resulting in the killing of three and the wounding of several radicals. he wounding of several radicals.

Disaster on Long Island Sound—Steamer Sunk and Several Persons Injured.

Sunk and Several Persons Injured.

Our telegrams yesterday contained a mention of a disaster on Long Island Sound. The following are the details which are published in this morning's New York Tribune:—

As the steamer Continental, which leaves her betth in New Haven for this city, at it o'clock in the evening, was coming out of the harbox at an early hour yesterday morning, she collided with and sunk the propeller Northampton, Captain Stannard, of the opposition line. Captain Bowns, of the Continental, and Mr. James L. Amsden, of Westfield, Mass. a passenger and an eye-witness, tell the following story:—At about 1 o'clock, yesterday morning, when the Continental was about five miles out of New Haven, the Captain was in the pilothouse and Mr. Amsden was near the bows of the boat conversing with the man on the lookout: the Captain and the watchman almost simultaneously discovered a single light nearly siraight ahead, which they supposed to be the Northampton, of the opposition line, though no head or stern light was visible. When at a proper distance, the Captain of the Continental sounded her whistle twice as a signal for the Northampton to continue on her course to the right, but the latter soon after sounded her whistle once and immediately charged her course, attempting to run across the bows of the Continental. The boats were now quite near each other, and approaching at a repid rate. The Captain of the Continental, now quite near each other, and approaching at a rapid rate. The Captain of the Continental, seeing that a collision was inevitable, immediately sounded the bell for the engineer to reverse the engine, and the wheel had made one full back revolution when the steamer struck the propeller amidships, on the starboard side, with a terrible shock, which threw the siceping passergers from their berths, and spread consternation through both vessels. The bows of the Continental passed completely through the starboard side of the propeller, cutting her nearly in two, and reaching the state-rooms on the opposite side. In the collision the steam-pipe of the Northampton was severed, and steam rushing out filled the bold and state rooms. The fireman of the propeller was so severely scalded that his life now quite near each other, and approaching at a rapid rate. The Capiain of the Continental ton was severed, and steam rushing out filled the bold and state rooms. The fireman of the propeller was so severely scalded that his life was despaired of; the engineer, Mr. Beach, and one Jameson, a colored waiter, were also slighly scalded. Immediately after the coili sion the passengers and crew of the Continental, finding that their vessel was not perionsly damaged, jumped ab ard of the Northampton and gallantly Loored to rescue the wounded of the latter vessel. All who could be found after a diligent search were taken off. On a hasty investigation being made it was found that the Northampton was in a sinking condition, being only held above the surface of the water by banging a dead weight on the bew of the Continental, which was still closely wedged into her hull and upper works. The state room struck by the Continental was occupied by Miss Carrie E. Brown, of this city, and it was almost entirely demolished, so that she was driven with the debris into one corner, whence she was with difficulty rescued, having suffered but a few slight bruises. A steam tug, with a barge in tow, arrived from New Haven, while the passengers of the Northampton were being rescued, and, on the request of Captain Bowns, of the Continental, remained near and took off some of the passengers. The solored waiters on board the Northampton were being rescued, and, on the request of Captain Bowns, of the Continental, remained near and took off some of the passengers. The solored waiters on board the Northampton were being rescued, and, on the request of Captain Bowns, of the Continental, remained near and took off some of the passengers. The solored waiters on board the Northampton were being tested off to some distance, lamediately the Northampton sank to her main deek, and as the uninjured steamer put about for the return to New Haven, was rapidly sinking in four and a half fathems. The wounded were landed at New Haven, where they received medical care, and the Continental then started, at 3 o'clock in the morning, for the trip to turn city, where she arrived yesterday morning, three hours late. It is reported that the Northampton was not insured, the rates on vessels plying in the Sound being so high as to be practically prohibitory. The last steamer was purchased three years and for $75,000. The Coast Wrecking Company despatched a steamer yesterday to the scene of the accident.

A gentlemen from Nisgara county, says the Buffelo Commercial of October 21, during a visit to Chicago not long since, was fortunate enough to be there one day when General Grant was also in the city, in company with Charles Wilson and Andrew Shuman, of the Chicago Journal. In the course of the conversation the matter of the Camilla butchery was alluded to, when General Grant turned to Mr. Wilson and said:—"Cherley, should ine people make me President, you and the people may be assured that all men will be permitted to speak their honest convictions wherever they may be within the boundaries of he United States." When these words were spoken, says the gentlemen, the lips of the General closed, as he imagined they might have done in the Wilderness, when an aid rode up to him and breathlessly announced that Sadgwisk's corps had been annibilisted, and received as an answer, General Grant on the Camilla Butchery. brenz nu bilated, and received as an answer, "I don't believe it."

"How Are the Mighty Fallen!" General John B. Magruder, of the Rebel'army, and ex-Lieutenant Edwin Higgins, of the Rebel navy, were last evening arrested in New York by the Fifteenth precinct police, for being drunk and disorderly, and insulting females in the store No. 667 Broadway. Both were locked up in the Mercer S reet Police Station.

DESTRUCTIVE VIRE.—Last night the extensive cloth manufactory of James Armstrong, situated on Duy's inne, near Germantown, was totally desiroyed by fire, which originated in the third story, which was used as the cardroom. Its cause is unknown, as the building had been gone through by the proprietors about two hours prior to the discovery of the flames, and everything found all right. The structure was built of stone, four stories in height, and forty-five feet broad and sixty feet long. It was eracted within the past year, and was only put in operation in April last. The Commonweath ex re', R. W. Parks. This was a writ of habeas corpus sued on the behalf of the relater, who was charged with conspiracy to cheat and derrand and with false pretenses. It was atteged that in October, 1866 Mr. Parks stated to the prose cutor that he had a new invention in the snape of a lampburner, but was in need of about $2000 to pay the expenses of taking out a patent, and he would like to have him buy it for that sum. The prosecutor answered that as he was not sure about the patent he would not buy, but he had no objection to ad vancing him the money required Mr. Parks accepted this, and in order to snow inducements for the loan, went on to tell that he himself was worth $30,-100, and that he had $15,000 in the hands of his brothers, whom, however, he did not like to call upon as they were engaged in oullding, and to make assurance doubly sure he gave the promissory notes of these brothers as security. The money was loaned him, but several weeks afterwards, when payment was demanded, he relined, saying nothing could be made out of a suit, and he has nev r paid the deb. It was also alleged that part of the money noaned Mr. Parks in the patent. The Judge, thinking that the faise pretense was not within the meaning of the law, discharged the relator from that charge, but frought it was proper for a jury to decide whether there had not been a conspiracy to cheat and defraud, and remanded the new account of the law, and so have been made and who was inserested with Parks in the patent.
