NAUTICAL DESCRIPTION OF A QUADRILLE. - A sailor, while explaining the third figure of a quadrille to his messmate, thus described it: -"You first heave ahead," said he, "and pass your adversary's yard-arm, regain your berth on the other tack in the same order, take your partner in line, back and fill, and then fall on your keel, and bring up with your partner; she then manœuvres ahead, off alongside of you; then make sail in company with her until nearly astern of the other line, make a stern board, cast her off to shift for herself, regain your place the best way you can, and let go your anchor."

When Theodore Hook was asked for a donation to the Society for the Conversion of the Jews, he replied that he had no money to give away; but if they sent him a Jew, he would try and convert him. This was not quite what the Society required, and Hook never heard from

The Young Man who Wasn't Invited Out to Dinner Yesterday.

A gentlemen entered an omnibus not long since, carrying with him a bag, which he placed on the seat beside him. Soon after a young woman took the adjoining seat. After bestowing frequent looks of surprise and indignation at her neighbor, who remained perfectly unconscious of her disquietude, she suddenly sprang upon her feet, and exclaiming "Insolent!" gave him a couple of sound boxes on the ear. The assaulted one at length ventured to ask why he had become the recipient of these favors. "You pinched me," exclaimed the lady, furiously. The gentleman made no reply, but, looking under the seat, brought to light a magnificent live lobster, which had escaped from the bag.

Creditors are like corns: they are always reminding one where the shoe pinches. The only way to get rid of them is to cut them-and that won't prevent them coming again.

What a comedy of grief is that performed by sympathetic undertakers! Their motto should be "Hearse and Rehearse."

He commenced the prayer as follows:-"Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep; if I should chance to fall below Demosthenes or Cicero, don't view me with a cricket's eye-" "Stop, stop!" said his mother; "that isn't a part of the prayer." REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS. FAIR PLAY: OR, THE TEST OF THE LONE ISLE.
By Mrs. Emma D. E. N. Southworth. Published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers.

This novel was originally published in the New York Ledger under a different title. The present name has been adopted by Mrs. South. worth as an antithesis to "Foul Play," and although she rather elaborately exonerates Mesers. Reade and Boucicault from the charge of plagiarism, it is suggestive of the idea that she demands fair play for her own production at the hands of the public. Mrs. Southworth claims that her work was published in the London Journal in 1865 and 1866; that "Foul Play was first published in 1868; and that the situation of the shipwrecked lovers on a solitary island, "which has been called the most beautiful and original part of each story," originated with her.

Those who will read the two stories will scarcely consider the authors of "Foul Play" as guilty of plagiarism. They may or may not have borrowed the idea from Mrs. Southworthbut beyond the bare idea there is scarcely anything in common between the island life of the lovers in the two books. The characters and the whole manner of treating the subject are essentially different. Mrs. Southworth's story is interesting, but it seems to us that there is a little humbuggery in her choice of a

-From Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger we have received "The Hand of Jesus," by Rev. J. Chaptin, D. D. Published by Andrew F. Graves, Boston. This is a collection of religious meditations in prose and verse, which will doubtless find appreciative readers. The volume is handsomely printed and bound.

-From the same house we have received Charles Wentworth Dilke's "Greater Britain," published by Harper & Brothers. We noticed the Lippincott edition of this work a few weeks ago, and it is therefore only necessary for us to commend it at this time as an interesting record of travel by an Englishman who knew how to divest himself of his insular prejudices, and to use his eyes and ears for the discovery of facts upon which to base his speculations. Mr. Dilke's account of the United States is particularly worthy of attention, for it is written in a fair and impartial spirit that other English travellers would do well to imitate.

-"Oscar Bertrand" is the title of a novel by Miss M. E. Braddon, published by Robert M. DeWitt, New York. It is written in the usual Braddonian style, and there is no likelihood that it will lack admirers.

The Feeling Entertained Towards Mr. WM. M. CHRISTY,

From the London Times. It is not for us to enter into the differences of opinion which are said to have arisen among Americans with respect to the manner in which Mr. Johnson has discharged his mission; and it may be worth while to observe that, with one discreditable exception which we shall presently notice, there has been nothing in our reception of Mr. Johnson which has had the slightest reference to their political disputes. He has been received and welcomed by all classes as the Minister of the United States. He was not relected by us, but was commissioned by them. We have certainly not been disposed to regret their choice, but whoever they might have sent would have been received here in a similar spirit and with similar unsalmity. We gladly seized the opportunity of expressing to their representative the sincere friendship we feel towards them; and if some persons we feel towards them; and if some persons have joined in that expression who in former times have been thought to display a different feeling, it is only a sign that now at least we are unantimous in our friendly disposition. Hisd we, indeed, displayed any distrast of Mr. Johnson, the Americans would have had good reason to complain. He is the accredited Minister from their Government, and a slight to him would be a public slight to them. Mr. Johnson has himself placed the matter in a very proper light in a letter we publish elsewhere. Some workmen connected with the Reform League have invited him to dinner; but in con-League have in vited him to dinner; but in con-sequence of the discussions in America to which we have alluded, a division of feeling arose among them, and they have withdrawn the invitation. They were not even content with this piece of rudeness, but must needs tell Mr. Johnson, in plain words, of a supposed hos-tility towards him of a majority of Americans. To this he justly replies that "he denies the To this he justly replies that "he denies the right of any class of persons in this country, many or few, to question that he is a representative of the Government and people of the United States; and he objects, if possible, more decidedly that any such impression constitutes even the semblance of excuse for any act of discourtesy towards him officially." Mr. Johnson even the semblance of excuse ... Mr. conriesy towards him officially." Mr. conriesy towards him officially." Mr. is fortunate in escaping from contact with persons who are obviously ignorant of the manners of gentlemen. But their insult to the United States Ambassador is of more importance than their rudeness to Mr. Johnson. He is not mistaken, rudeness to Mr. Johnson. He is not mistaken, however, in supposing that this committee represent nobody but themselves, and that the working class are in accord with all other classes in the respect with which they desire to treat any one who may hold his office. Before Mr. Conlegsby and his friends take upon themselves again to interfere in public matters we trust they will acquaint themselves with the rules both of ordinary society and of official courtesy. We repeat that, so long as Mr. Johnson is the accredited Minister of the United States we treat him with the most unqualified trust as their representative; and unless the Americans are displeased at our entertaining a friendly feeling towards themselves, they have no reason to be displeased with our reception of their minister. Origin of the new Difficulty between Turkey and Greece Turkey and Greece.

The Times publishes a long letter from its correspondent at Athens, dated the 10th inst. in which the immediate origin of the present difficulty is poisted out. According to this writer the government of M. Bulgares, wishing to gain popularity, and feeling the necessity of bringing the expensive business of feeding an insurrection in the Cretan mountains to an end in one way or another at any risk, began lately to patronize open attacks on Turkey. A large corps of adventurers, paid in advance and equipped at the public expense, but called volunteers, was collected at Athens. Bands of these men, dressed in a new uniform devised for the occaat Athens. Bands of these men, dressed in a new uniform devised for the occasion, were seen walking about the streets of the capital as if to attract attention to the expedition. Their leader, Petropoulakes, wao headed an expedition to Crete a year ago, drove past the residence of the Ottoman Minister displaying a Greek flag from the coach her ing a Greek flag from the coach box, and attended, as the Greek papers say, by 150 followers in the new uniform. Groups of the adventurers in their new uniforms passed slao at intervals before the Ottoman and British Legations for two days. When they were attended by a hand of music, and cheered by crowds of of admirers.

It was said that the Government had supplied Colonel Petropoulakes with 120,0000 drachmas for this expedition, and tust he nad 1000 men ready to join him in Maina. At Syra, report said that the Government had 60,000 drachmas for fitting out the Enosis and Crete as armed cruisers, and supplied them with Armstrong guns and ammusition from the arsenal at Naupila and the dock-yard at Poros. M. Bulgares, who is Minister of the Interior, as well as Prime Minister, had also refused, when solicited by Photlades Bey, the Turkish Minister, to send a police force to protect the Cretain families at Argoss and Ægina who desired to return to their homes, but were intimidated by armed mobs. The Ottoman Government could not overlook this open bostility. Photlades Bey, who is a man of talent, a Greek, and a sincere friend of Christian progress and good government in the East, was ordered to demand from the Greek Government a direct assurance that it would prevent the departure of the troops from Man. cast was ordered to demand from the Greek Government a direct assurance that it would prevent the departure of the troops from Maina, and the armed blockade-runners from syra, and in future give due protection to the Gretan families that wished to embark for Crete. In case the Government refused to give this assurance the Minister was ordered to break off all relations with King George's Government. all relations with King George's Government and quit Athens on the 13th inst. At the same time he was to inform the Hellenic Government that in case of a rupture the ports of the Ottomav Empire would be closed against Greek vessels, and all Greek subjects would be ordered to depart from Turkey within a fixed term. The writer then proceeds to show by quoterm. The writer then proceeds to show by quotations from the Greek papers the spirit in which these demands of Tarkey were freceived. The Greeks the says) generally argue that all the European powers, except Eussis, dread the opening of the Eastern question. They have manifested their terror by the vaciliation of their conduct during the Cretan insurrection, and when their advice was not listened to they appeared that they would leave to Turkey alone the whole responsibility of the course it. anneanced that they would leave to Turkey alone the whole responsibility of the course it adopted. On the whole, it is evident that the Greeks persuade themselves they are entitled ta act as they have acted, and they believe confidently that the protection of the three great powers will save them from any disastrous consequences that might result from a rupture with the Ottoman Government.

Conviction of the Brodhead Murderers STROUDSBURG, Jan. 1.—Last evening Judge Barrett delivered his charge to the jury in the Gap murder case. It was able and frank, and pointed directly towards the evidence. About 9:30 P. M. the case was given to the jury, with instructions to have the court house bell rung in case they found a verdict before 12 o'clock. At 11:45 the bell rang, and the house was crowded. The prisoners were brought into court, and the Judge appounced the verdict as found by the jury-the prisoners are guilty of murder in the first degree. Sentence has not
