GENERAL GRANT.

An Interesting Interview with the Prealdent Elect - He Speaks his Mind-What he says of Southern Improve ments.

From the Bt. Louis Democrat, Dec. 30. A distinguished citizen of St. Louis, a profos-sional gentleman of reliable judgment, has just returned from Washington, where he had an introduction to the President elect, and very easantly relates characteristics of the inter pleasantly relates characteristics of the inter-view that go far to exhibit the clear thought and the independent judgment of the man whom the people honor. We hope to hear from our friend often, and present his aketch this morning under his own title of

A HALF HOUR WITH GENERAL GRANT. To the Editors of the Missouri Democrat:-It was my good fortune this morning to spend a short time with the man to whom, more than to any other, the eyes of the nation are at present

The beadquarters of the armies of the United States is an unassuming two story building, formerly a private residence, directly opposite the Navy Department. In company with a friend your correspondent presented himself, inquiring of an orderly in the ball if the General was in. Receiving an affirmative reply, our cards were sent up. In a few moments we were requested to walk up stairs to the General's office.

His office is a front room on the second floor, about sixteen feet by eighteen. It is carpeted with an ingrain carpet of bright, cheerful colors, giving the room the sir of a parlor rather than that of a business office. There are two windows in front and one at one side. By the side window is a low desk for a member of his staff. Near it is a table about six feet long, covered with piles and bundles of official documents, all thed with the inevitable red tape. Grant's desk—a common office desk—is but ween the front windows. A frame covered with sus-

Grant's desk—a common office desk—is between the front windows. A frame covered with suspended maps and half a dozen cnairs complete the furniture.

When we entered the General was out. In a moment he entered by a side door. No one could fail to recognize him instantly. The likenesses one sees everywhere are very like indeed. They do not flatter, as is usually the case, neither do they make aim younger than he really appears. The pictures we see of Johnson are not like him; he is much older, more wrinkled and carewoin than they represent son are not like him; he is much older, more wrinkled and carewoin than they represent him. Not so, however, with Grant. The platures of the shops, the pariors, and cabins are strikingly true representations of the man. Grant's countenance is pale and has an expression of sadness. He has a noticeable stoop of the shoulders and walks with a shuffling gait. He locks like a man burdened with care and anxiety, and as if it was by a strong effort of the will that he was bearing up against it, determined that he would not yield to it or be affected by it. affected by it. He was dressed in a plain suit of black, with

In a few moments Senator—was announced, with Judge,—of Louislana. "General," said the Seuator, "Judge—wished to see you a few moments and consult with you in regard to the improvement of the leves of the Lower Mississippi. We wish the United States Government to endorse, anithus guarantee, the bonds of the State of Louislana for the restoration and improvement of the leves."

"I hope the Government will not do it," the General replied, with a quick, positive utter-ance that was not only decisive and final on that subject, but almost stunning. "But, General." urged the Senator "we only wish the United States to Indorse the bonds, so that we can sell them without a ruinous dis-count, giving the United States ample security for the entire amount, so that it would be impossible for the Government to lose a cent in Again Grant quickly interrupted, "I never Again Grant quickly interrupted, "I never knew a government to become responsible for any amount that it did not uitimately have to pay. You now want the indorsement of the bonds. If that is given, you will soon want to legislate for the payment of the bonds." "General," said the Senator, "you are too bard on us."

"While we are discussing on all sides," said Grant, "how the national debt is to be paid, I shall oppose any increase of the national obligations."

"I know all about the levees," he answered
"I served in that country when a young man, and I had something to do myself with the

"But," said the Judge, "millions of acres of the best land in the world are subject to overflow."
"Let them overflow and let them stay under water," said Grant, "until their owners are will change them a particle. I know no way the Government could have adopted for rebuilding the leeves but to have conflicated the lands of those engaged in rebellion and used the pro-oceds to restore the country. As that was not done, nothing remains but to set your negroes to work and invite in and welcome Northern

"Won't work!" Grant quietly replied.
"They'll work if you'll pay them for it."
"Am I not right?" he added. "Is there not such a hostillity to Northern men that it amounts, in most sections of the State, to a practical exclusion of them from the agricultural interests of the country? Is there not an unwillingness to divide up the lands and sell in small parcels to those who might immigrate? and is there not a general tendency to secure the services of the negroes without prompt and "I must say," said the Judge, "that there is more or less of truth in all these points."

"Then," said Grant, "I think you will have to build your own levees or walt under water until you are willing men should come in who will build them."

The above, though not all that was said, gives the substance and spirit of the conversation.

It shows much more plainly than any statement I have seen precisely where the President elect now stands with reference to the Bouth.

This conversation shows that whatever he may heresfler do, he now stands by his past record. He means that a citizen of the United record. He means that a citizen of the United States shall be recognized as such, and secured and protected in his rights and privileges in every State; that the freedom of the freedman shall be recognized and his labor fairly compensated; that the national obligations shall not be increased, and that the promo ers of the late war at the South shall not be aided by the Government in repairing the damages constitution. Government in repairing the damages ocea-

That he will follow the course of Johnson and abandon the party that elected him, and to any extent identify himself with his enemies and opponents in the war, is contrary to the character of the man and his present positive and clearly expressed. and his present positive and clearly expressed

Grant's manner is that of quiet ease, perfect self reliance, and the most positive convictions. He expresses his ideas in short sentences and in a low tone of voice. Although there is a remarkable quietness in his manner, there is remarkable quietness in his manner, there is at the same time marked positiveness of utterance to such a degree indeed that one feels that there is very little use in replying to an adverse opinion. Though there was nothing approximating to rudeness, yet there was that positiveness in his first short response to the Louisiana Benator and Judge that left them neither heart nor hope to plead their cause further. It was elegily evident that what they said after that was in defense of themselves rather than with the hope of making an impression on their hope of making an impression on their

A warrant was i-sued for the arrest of Adam Titus, the supposed murderer, who was in town at the time. An inquest was held on the body, after which it was brought here. When the prisoner was confronted with the murdered man he showed signs of his guilt by blanching. He was questioned as to when last with the man, when he acknowledged that they had quarrelled and be struck him, whereupon he was placed in custody until he can be taken to the county jail. The murdered man's name is Henry Steel, a stranger in these parts, and was in company with Titus from Monday till Wednesday last. Titus' family inquired of him where he was, and giving evasive answers, they made an examination around the premises, when they found the man baried on the bank of a pend a short distance from the house, with his throat cut from ear to ear, and his skull crushed apparently by a blow of an axe.
