MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"Twelfth Night" at the Arch.

Twelfth Night, of all the plays of Shakespeare that may be said to still keep possession of the stage, is one of the least frequently represented, and, on the whole, this is not a matter for much regret, for if not well done it had best not be done at all. Bome years ago it was produced at the Arch in very superior style, but since then, to the best of our knowledge, it has not been performed in this city until last evening. Sparkling as it does with some of the brightest Shakespearian; wit and humor, with the serious and comic scenes blended as no dramatist but Shakespeare could blend them, and with an array of characters scarcely one of whom can be said to be of secondary importance, the interest of Twelfth Night, as an acting play, is so dependent on the ability of the actors, that in the hands of a good stock company alone can it be made interesting or attractive. If well acted, however, there are few plays, even In Shakespeare's repertoire, that will afford bet ter entertainment.

The plot of Twelfth Night is taken, like most of the comedies and romantic dramas of Shakespeare, from an Italian novel, but, as was his custom, the story is made merely the background upon which to display a variety of characters and incidents of his own invention. The plot is interesting, although inclining to what in these matter-of-fact days might be called sentimentality, but the story is relieved from triviality by the graceful poetry and fine humor with which the poet has enriched it.

"Viola," the heroine of the play, if heroine there be, is one of those peculiarly delicate pieces of female characterization that Shakespeare excelled in, and which can be compared with nothing outside of his pages. "Viola" reminds us of "Rosalind," inasmuch as in the disguise of masculine attire she woos the man she loves; but the refined art of the post is nowhere shown so much as in the distinction which he makes between the two characters Both are essentially feminine, but with "Rosalind" the masquerado is much of a jest, and the forwardness of her manuer, her fearless demeanor, and the brillian y of her wit are her best protection in the anomalous position in which she is placed. With "Viola," on the contrary, the disguise is a necessity: she shrinks from discovery, and her perplexities are increased by her love for the "Duke," no less than by the amorous advances of "Olivia." The situation is further embarrassed by the hostilities of the cowardly "Sir Andrew Aguecheek," hounded on to the attack by "Sir Toby Belch" and his merry companions. The peculiar grace, dellcacy, and sweetness of this character make it exceedingly difficult to represent upon the stage, and few actresses have succeeded in performing it in such a manner as to satisfy the highest critical requirements. "Sir Toby Belch" may be described as a "Falstaff" without a paunch, and as his avoirdupois is less, so is his humor more sprightly, if not so unctuous as that of the fat knight. Twelfth Night was written, according to the best evidences on the subject, before Henry IV, or we might imagine "Bir Toby" to be the forerunner of "Falstaff." "Sir Andrew Aguecheek" is a distinctively Shakespearian character, but, with the exception of "Malvolio," the individuality of the remaining personages of the comedy is not strongly marked. "Malvolio" is the character of the play, and, with the exception perhaps of a slight superficial likeness to "Don Adriano de Armado" in Love's Labor Lost, there is nothing in or out of Shakespeare to resemble him. "Sick of self-love" is a perfect description of "Malvolio:" and while the character is drawn with such firm and decided touches that any fair comedian could scarcely fall to make it amusing, an actor of first-rate ability could alone give such a personation as would be worthy of the hearty commendation of readers

Chesnut as "Dogberry." Miss Davenport, as the "merry devil" of the play, "Maria," acquits her. self well, but her performance would be improved by a little more animation. This young lady has been kept rather in the background since her engagement at the Arch, and we are pleased to see her in a part in which she can do herself justice and desire that she will make the most of her opportunitiles. "Olivia" is a part remarkably well suited to Miss Price, and she plays it with a great deal of grace and refined expression. Miss Price's performance last evening was one of the best she has yet given us. Mr. Hemple made an excellent "Clown," and Mr. Everly acted the minor character of "Sebastian" very well indeed. The character of "Orsino" does not afford much opportunity for acting; but the actor who undertakes it might at least speak his lines so that the audience can understand what he is saying. This Mr. James Moes not do. Mrs. Drew has placed Twel/th Night on the stage in excelient style; the costumes are handsome and appropriate, and the scenery is very good. The sea-coast scene in the first act is very fine indeed. The colors are brighter and the general tone is better than is usual in Mr. Hawthorne's works, and it will do much to advance the reputation of that gentleman as a scenic artist. The garden adjoining "Oliva's" palace is also good. The gothic apartment in the palace of "Orsino" in the first act, and the sea-port in the second act, by Mr. Fetters, are entitled to commendation.

There were a few trifling balks last evening, but the the audience was pleased, and there is very little doubt but that it will draw paying houses for the balance of the week.

of Shakspeare.

Twelfth Night is one of the most carefully finished of Snakespeare's lighter comedies; the purely comic element predominates, and it is devoid of any tragic interest whatever, The; title Twelfth Night appears to be purely arbitrary; and the only explanation that has been offered with regard to it is, that the merry spirit of the play makes it suitable for Twelfth-night festivities. The second title-What You Will, seems to indicate that the poet purposely designed to be indefinite. In a copy of the play which belonged to King Charles I and now deposited in the British Museum, the title is altered, in the handwriting of the monarch, to Malvolio.

A large audience was in attendance last evening at the Arch, and the performance passed off with a great deal of spirit. Whatever critical objections might be urged against the conception of some of the characters, there was a finish and style about the performance that is too seldom seen when plays of this character are on the boards.

Mrs. Drew's "Viola," as a whole, was an extremely fine and artistic personation. In the scenes with "Olivia" and in the duel scene with "Sir Andrew Aguecheck" she was especially good. Mrs. Drew, however, failed to hit the peculiarly graceful and poetical conception of the character which any careful reader of the play would realize. In the scenes with "Ortino," in the early stages of the play especially, she drawled too much. In the scene where she receives "Olivia's" ring by the hand of "Malvolio," and her suspicions are excited that the lady is in love with her, Mrs. Drew speaks the words:-

"I left no ring with her. What means this lady? Fortune forbid, my outside have not charmed het her! She made good view of he; indeed, so much, That, sure, methought, her eyes had lost her tengue,

For she did speak in starts distractedly; She loves me, sure; the cunning of her pission invites me in this churlish messenger. None of my lord's ring! why, he sont her none. I am the man:-" as if the whole affair was a capital joke. This is an interpretation worthy of a second-rate sonbrette accidentally cast for a first-rate part, and it is certainly not the correct reading, however much it may be authorized by stage tradition. Mr. Barton Hill's "Malvolio" is good, but it hardly rises to the dignity of a work of art. Mr. Hill gives way too much to his guttural ragic tones, and his exaggerated grandeur of deportment is too palpably assumed, and is something different from the magnificent selfsufficiency of the real character as Shakespeare drew it. Mr. Hill does not make "Malvoilo" the most striking figure in the play, as he ought to be. The scene in the garden, where the steward finds the letter, and the subsequent interview with "Olivia," are very well acted, however, although a trifle heavy. The key-note to "Malvolio's" enaracter is the description of him by "Olivia":-

"Oh, you are sick of self-love, Malvollo, and taste with a distempered appetite." and this should be borne in mind by any actor undertaking the part.

Better than Mr. Hill's "Malvolio" is the "Sir Andrew Aguecheek" of Mr. Craig. This is the more purely comic and less difficult part of the two, but Mr. Craig's "make up" is artistic, and his acting remarkably good. Mr. Mackay as "Bir Toby Belch" is excellent, and he very nearly, but not quite, makes as great a hit in his part as he did a couple of seasons ago at the | Machines. No. 730 Chesnut street.

this piece of furniture is made to combine within liself a handsome sofa, a comfortable bed, and a commodious bureau. Many families in this city are cramped for room in their dwellings, and such a contrivance as this cannot fail to find appreciative admirers. In the daytime it looks like a handsome sofa, and no one would suspect from its appearance that it had any other character. By opening the sides and lowering the back, it is in a moment converted into a bedstead, with spring mattresses, and under this is placed the bureau. The economy and utility of such an arrangement as this will be ap parent at once, and all housekeepers who are inte rested should call and take a look at it, at the store of Mr. Hover, No. 250 South Second street.

HALLET, DAVIS & CO.'S PIANO-FORTES, containing their famous NEW SCALES which render these instruments so wonderfully pure and brilliant, are now offered for sale in Philadelphia for the first time. A striking feature in both their Concert Grand Planos and Square Grand Plancs) is their remaining in tune under the most difficult playing, which is owing to their reculiar construction and superior workmanship. They possess, in a most remarkable degree the most wonderful distinctness of tone, which is as clear and sweet as the song of birds. The beautiful elasticity of action, together with the very unusual evenness throughout the entire instrument, place Hallet, Davis & Co.'s Planos at the head. But this is not all. They have lowered their prices, and purchasers may obtain one of their instruments at about the usual price of the second class. Redfield Pheips & Co. are the Philadelphia Agents, No. 927 Chesnut
