MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1869.

A Fight with the Thieves. THE remarks of General Grant to the committee by whom he was officially apprised of his election as President of the United States will exoite universal interest. The people will regard with no little satisfaction the neat device by which the soldier has flanked the politicians in relation to the Cabinet, and relieved bimself, as well as the "gentlemen whose services he would be glad to have," from the annoying pressure which interested parties are in the habit of applying on such occasions.

A President is usually deluged with an everflowing supply of advice, but it is as gifficult, ordinarily, for him to obtain sincere and honest counsel, prompted solely by a desire to promote the public interest, as it is to close his ears against the deafening clang of importunate suitors for office. Grant has done more than any of his predecessors to avoid the latter, and yet, in view of his frequent interminglings with the people, his visits from city to city, and his repeated consultations with the prominent members of the Republican party at Washington and elsewhere, he is unusually well prepared to select a good Cabinet.

But one of the most noticeable and significant features of the address is its reference to "the necessities for an honest and faithful discharge of the revenue laws" and "the principles of economy, retrenchment, and honesty which were desired by the people of the country." We have here, in brief, the main planks of the platform of the President elect. With military precision and military fidelity, he is about to address himself to the task which public men are so prone to forget-an honest discharge of his plain duties. Andrew Johnson, in his seal to enforce a suicidal policy, forgot his oath to execute the laws, and he prostituted the highest of political powers to the basest partisan purposes. He removed and appointed officers, not with reference to their usefulness to the public service, but with an eye single to their real or assumed opinions on reconstruction. Integrity and efficiency were branded with removal if they were not supplemented by approval of drunken White House speeches, and bald knavery in office needed no better protection than a denunciation of Congress or a hypocritical hurrah over the most absurd sentiments uttered by Andy when he swinging round the circle.

General Grant gives a very distinct intimatien that the public offices, under his administration, are to be rendered useful agencies in promoting great public ends, rather than mere ornamental and profitable perquisites of oorrupt politicians. He announces that men who fail to discharge their duties will be promptly dismissed, no matter whether they are "his own appointments" or "those of his predeoesser." Once more the old Jeffersonian standard, "Is he honest? Is he capable?" is to be established, and men who fall below it will no longer be able to atone for moral or mental deficiencies by mere partisan zeal. We have no fears of General Grant's fidelity to the Republican party, and we have no doubt of his earnest desire to promote the interests of that organization, and to reward its faithful and zealous members. But he has been too thoroughly disgusted with the shameful results of Johnson's course to knowingly keep a rogue in office because he pretends to be a Republican, or to fail to insist upon a due regard for the public interests as the first consideration in all important appointments.

It is clear that General Grant has made up his mind to fight the thieves as earnestly and steadily as he fought the Rebels during the war. A few days ago he quietly remarked to a friend that while he knew the Government was shamefully defrauded in the collection of revenues, he had made up his mind that they could be honestly collected; and he added that having formed this opinion, he was resolved that "they should be collected," and that if one set of men failed to act honestly others of undoubted reliability would be selected.

During the war, when a remark was made to the wife of the President elect in regard to his alleged determination to capture an important Rebel stronghold, she replied that, "If he says he will take that place he will be very apt to de it, for Mr. Grant is a very stubborn man." Events proved that she was right; and now that a fight against the thieves, the plausible, sleek, well-fed corruptionists, who are clad in purple and time linen, and roll in wealth filched from the American people, is about to be commenced, we think that victory will again perch upon the banner of the hero of Donelson, Vicksburg, and Appomattox: and he will, at all events, have in this conflict the hearty sympathies of the honest men of all parties.

Bedford Street and Vicinity.

EVERY Philadelphian knows of Bedford street by reputation, but the number of those who have any actual acquaintance with the horrors of the locality is very small. A hasty glance and a rapid retreat are usually sufficient for most respectable persons, and very few have either the courage or disposition to investigate the filth and misery of this abode of crime and degradation. The attention of the public and the authorities has been called to the coudition of Bedford street and its vicinity time and again by the press, but hitherto there has been scarcely anything done towards abating the nuisance and assisting the wretches who inhabit these vile dens to better their condition. A few Christian men and women have made this plague-spot a field for missionary labor, but they have received such small encouragement from the community at large that their work and influence scarcely accomplish any appreciable results. Bedford, Baker, and Spafford streets, and their intersecting alleys and courts, are in the immediate neighborhood of one of the wealthiest portions of the city; and it is scarcely five minutes' walk from the elegant house sof Walnut, Spruce, and Pine streets to the hovels where crime and disease are engendered, to be spread ever the city in every direction. Again and again have the public been warned that some terrible epidemic would spring from the filth of Bedford street to devastate this city but the warnings have scarcely been regarded, and it is doubtful whether any thorough remedies will be applied until the cholera or yollow fever have commenced their work of On Saturday the Sanitary Committee of the Board of Health, accompanied by High Constable Clark, visited Bedford and Spafford streets for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the tenement-houses, and to determine what action was necessary to bring about a reform. Even at this season of the year the foul odors were found to be almost unbearable, and serious apprehensions were excited as to the effects of the hot weather in producing disease. The committee discovered as many as six and eight persons, white and black, male and female, huddled together in little rooms but a few feet square, where they cooked, washed, ate, and slept like so many swine in sties. Many of the houses in Bedford street are simply frame shanties, almost tumbling to the ground, but inhabited from garret to cellar by human beings, some of whom, indeed, from the effects of filth and vile whisky, seemed to have lost all semblance of humanity and to have become assimilated to the beasts. Ten, five, and even two cents per night are charged for lodging in these dens, and it is a significant fact that wealthy, and apparently respectable, owners of Bedford street property have hitherto thrown most obstacles in the way of reforming the wretches of this place; and the reason for this is that the rents, collected by agents, are higher in proportion than in any other section of the city.

The committee of the Board of Health were unanimous in the opinion that some strenuous measures should be adopted in the way of reform, but as the law now stands they are almost powerless to do anything towards abating the nuisance. In fact, no permanent reform can be effected until the whole place is cleared out, the tenement-houses torn down, and a house of correction provided for the vagabonds who infest it.

The committee of the Board of Health were accompanied in their tour of observation by Rev. John H. Long, the indefatigable Bedford street missionary. Mr. Long has labored faithfully to do something for the reformation of Bedford street, and he has succeeded in rescuing a number of children from lives of misery and crime, by inducing them to attend the mission schools, and finding them homes in respectable families, where they will be removed from degrading associates. Mr. Long, however, has not received that liberal support from the Christian people of Philadelphia that the importance of his work entitles him to. Immense sums of money are collected in this city every year for the benefit of the heathen in Africa and China, while here at our very doors are heathen viler than the vilest, upon whom scarcely a passing thought is bestowed. It is a question worthy of consideration, whther the Bedford and Spafford street souls are not as worthy of salvation as those of heathen in other portions of the world.

The Velocipedes on Broad Street.

THE Nicolson pavement seems likely to prove a nuisance instead of a blessing to the people on Broad street, and strenuous measures ought to be adopted by our civic authorities to prevent our great thoroughfare from being given up to the use of reckless young men who seem to look upon it as a public race-course, provided for their especial benefit. Time and again have pedestrians been put in peril of life and limb by horses driven at full speed, and it is only occasionally that the police can be aroused into a fit of activity so as to enforce the law against fast driving. A new feature has now appeared on the Broad street race-course, and yesterday some half dozen velocipedists were engaged in exercising their skill, much to the annoyance of the residents and the peaceable pedestrians. The velocipede in its present shape is something new, and, like other novelties, it is all the rage with certain classes. Whether it will ever become permanently popular or not is doubtful; but whether it does or not, such exhibitions as those on Broad street yesterday afternoon should be put a stop to. Sunday to many of the residents of Broad street is a day of dread: hitherto they have considered themselves in perfl of life and limb from fast horses, and now they are afflicted with velocipedes. We hope that Mayor Fox will take this matter under consideration, and on future Sunday afternoons have a sufficient police force stationed on Broad street to restrain the enthusiasm of the velocipedists as well as the drivers of fast nags. It is a shame that one of the noblest streets in the world should every Sunday be made a nuisance to promenaders, and the evils complained of ought to be remedied without fur-

LONDON IMPROVEMENTS .- We learn, says the London Ath engum, from the annual report published by the Metropolitan Beard of Works, that all the works of the main drainage scheme have been complete and in operation for the past three years, with the exception of some portions of the northern low level sewer and the Abbey Mills pumping-station. The area comprehended in the system of drainage is 117 square miles. The effect upon the Thames is so salutary that during the long drought of last summer no offensiveness arose from the river, and fish multiply more and more. That the sewage can be profitably applied to the fertilization of land has been demonstrated by excellent crops of grass and wheat in the lowlands of Essex. It is now settled that the embankment between the Temple and Blackfriars shall be solid, and not an open viaduct, as was long talked of. The new street from Blackfriars to the Mansion House is to be 3450 feet long and 70 feet wide. According to their own showing, the Board are always on the watch to secure open spaces for health and recreation; and they tell us that Finsbury Park and Southwark Park will both be opened to the public in the coming summer. The desirable reform in the re-naming and renumbering of streets is steadily carried on; the number of fire engine stations has been increased from 19 to 47, and of firemen and officers from 130 to 314; and on and after the 1st of January, 1870, the price of gas is to be 3s 6d. the thousand feet.

AND NO. 600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. THE PERDS OF SIGENESS,-Baron Munchausen tells a story of a post-boy's horn, which had a num ber of wicked tunes blown into it one frosty night, but made no response. Nevertheless, when it was hung before a hot fire, the tunes, which had been frozen in. thawed out, to the amazement of all present. Just so the human system, subjected to injurious influences during the winter, sometimes gives no token of the effect they have produced upon it, until the moist atmosphere of spring develops their fruits. Many spring diseases are the result of winter improdences. and great and especial care should be taken of the system in the cold sesson, so that it may be in a sound and vigorous condition when the malarlous fogs of March and April make their appearance. To this end, strengthen the stomach and the general orgenization at this season with Hospetren's BITTERS. Take this pleasant vegetable autidote in advance of the uprising of the mephlic mists and vapors, which produce chills and fever, and other misematic diseases. Remember that it is a presenting medicine-as powerful to protect as to restore. The stomach is apt to be overtaxed at this time of the year. It is a period devoted to dinner and supper sarties, and inxurious living generally. Feasting and late hor ?? weaken the digestive organs and disorder the liver. The effice of the Bitters is to invigorate the one and regulate the other. There is no month in the twelve when a tonic and alterative is more generally needed than to this, and there is no preparation of that nature so thoroughly salubrious, so bracing, and so entirely free from undue exciting properties, as this celebrated vegetable cordial,

So Institious are the first approaches of Consumption that thousands 'remain unconscious of its presence until it has brought them to the verge of the grave. An immediate resort to DR. D. JAYNE'S Ex-PECTOBANT, upon the first appearance of the Cough, Pain, or Soreness of the Throat or Chest, would very generally preclude a fatal result, or, in case the symptoms indicate the presence of Latent Consumption, would tend to subdue the violence of the disesse, and thus materially assist in prolonging the life of the patient. Use the Expectorant, therefore, when you take a Cold, and thus prevent the necessity for its use in more dangerous complaints. Sold every-

They rang the bell of the parson's door,
And waited for haif an hour or more.
Till the parson came in, and enjoyed the fun of making the two folks into one.
And when he'd married them (don't you see?) of making the two folks into one.

And when he'd married them, (don't you see?)
They took their leave without paying their fee.

And the parson sadly began to grieve
At the profitless style of their taking leave.
But, while he's thinking, solemn as death,
Here runs a boy, all out of breath;
A boy with a bundle, stout and large.
"Parson," says he, "that's your's—no charge—
"That's the wedding fee, from those happy folks;
