MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

"Much Ado About Nothing" at the Arch. Mrs. Drew's second Shakespearian effort of the season attracted a large and fashionable audience at the Arch Street Theatre last evening. The taste and elegance with which the play is put upon the stage, and the very superior manner in which it is acted throughout, entitle the performance to the warmest praise, and to all the success which it is likely to meet with during the next two weeks. Much Ado About Nothing is acted more frequently than any of Shakespeare's comedies, and it is consequently well known to the playgoing public. As in many of Shakespeare's works, the characters around whom the greatest interest cen-tres have but a slight connection with the plot, and the success of the play is therefore dependent entirely upon the manner in which the actors acoult themselves, and not upon the interest of the story. The parts of "Benedick" and "Beatrice" are favorites with actors who essay the higher walks of comely, but the number of those who have achieved reputation as the representatives of these volatile and laughter-moving creations of the poet is limited to a few names. The characters are drawn with such consummate skill, and their wit and merriment are so spontaneous, that it seems difficult at all times to realize them upon the stage with the requisite case and grace Miss Josle Orton is one of the very few actresses who has of late years appeared to decided advantage as "Beatrice," and her performance of the part has not been equalled, certainly upon the Philadelphia stage, for a long time. Miss Orton loses nothing in comparison with Mrs. Drew, excellent as is that lady's personation. Mrs. Drew's "Beatrice,",like all her comedy, is a refined, elegant, and most enjoyable piece of acting. In the early scenes of the play, especially, she realizes the bright, sparkling, and vivacious disposition of the witty heroine admirably. In the wedding scene, and in the subsequent interview with "Benedick," her indignation at the base accusation made against "Hero" has too much the appearance of being assumed, and when she urges "Benedick" to challenge "Claudio" she seems to treat the affair in a rather joking spirit, and with less real earnestness than the occasion demands. Mrs. Drew, however, plays the part as few actresses of the day could play it, and her "Beatrice" is entitled to very hearty praise.

Mr. Barton Hill is usually at his best in high comedy, and "benedick" is one of the best personations he has given since he has been attached to the Arch street company. The part is in every way better suited to him than that of "Malvollo," and his acting is spirited and shows a thorough appreciation of the requirements of the character. Mr. Everly gives a refined and intelligent representation of "Don Pedro," and Mr. James makes an acceptable "Claudio," acting the part much better than he did that of "Orsino" in Tweifth Night. Miss Price makes a graceful and pleasing "Hero," and Mr. Charles E. Voltz as "Leonato," Mr. Wallis as "Antonio," and Mr. Creeze as "Don John." perform their parts creditably. We are somewhat surprised to find that Mr. Wallis was not cast for the part of "Leonato," as his ability and experience are more requisite to this part. The best thing in the play, however, is Mr. Mackay's 'Dogberry." This character could scarcely fail to be infinitely amusing under any circumstances, but Mr. Mackay acts it superlatively well, and he fully sustains the reputa-

OITY ITEMS. AN ENTERPEISING HOUSE .- The well-known and extensive publishing firm of Sowar, Barnes & Potts - until very recently located at No. 37 North Third street-are now fixed and furnished in their new store, No. 530 Market street. In this new and com modious business place, a building extending all the way back to Minor street, the firm has put everything conducive to the convenience of their customers, increased their facilities for the speedy and aystematic transaction of business, and added one or two new branches to their trads. The vasious stories in the place are nicely and neatly furnished. The books are arranged in such order on the shelves that delay in finding any particular one is well nigh impossible. One department is devoted to fine stationery, and as a convenience to buyers from other places a department of wall papers and window shades has been introduced. Deaks have been erected for the special use of customers. and other admirable features added. Altogether, the store is one of the most complete in the city, and the facilities it affords for the exercise of the evergy and experience of the firm cannot fail to produce a large increase of business. One thing specially noilcable in the place is the array of standard school books. For the publication of these the firm has attained a widespread celebrity, and a deserved reputation. They have been unliring in their efforts to do away with that disposition, too frequently evinced on the part of our school authorities, to seek in other cities school books which can just as readily be obtained in our own. They have at length succeeded, by the is us of some of their publications-publica-tions which, for school purposes, have eccived the unqualified endorsement o' thousands of capable and disinterested teachers both here and elsewherc-in convincing those who contemplate the purchase of such books that no necessity exists to go to other places to get them. We have them here in the store of Measrs. Sowers, Barnes & Potts, in kind, character, and arrangement far superior to any which can be found in either New York or Buston. We mention but one of these publications-and the mere mention will suffice to show the truth o what we have said. What books better than Brooks Normal Series of Arithmetics could be placed in the hands of both the teachers and the pupils in our Secondary and Grammar Schools ? The sanction they have received from the teachers whe have tried them, not only here but all over the Union, carries its own argument as to their superiority. By the publication of such works the firm has prospered. and will continue to prosper.

tion which he won in it a year or two ago at the Chevnut. No less excellent is Mr. Craig's "Verges." This antique personage has very little to say, but that little is said with effect. Mr. Craig's "make-up" is capital, and he is the personification of antiquated imbecility, and throughout the scene in which he appears, although his more garrulous companion manages to monopolize most of the conversation, Mr. Craig's thoroughly artistic acting makes this small part one of the first importance. Even if Much Ado About Nothing were performed but indifferently well in other respects, it would be worth a visit to see these two broadly comic characters so humorously represented as they are by Messrs. Mackay and Oraig.

Mrs. Drew has placed Much Ado About Nothing on the stage in admirable style. The scenery is very good, although the gar len scene in the second and third acts is not improved by the clumsy cut trees which are scattered about the stage. The opening scene by Hawthorne, representing a terrace before "Leonato's" palace, overlooking the Bay of Messins, and the ballroom scene in the second act, by Fetters, possess much ment. The costumes are rich, elegant, and in the best taste, and they add greatly to the effect of the perform-The play passed off with much ance. spirit last evening, and it will doubtless improve at each performance; Incelfth Night was much better on the twelfth night than it was on the first. A few more watchmen in the street scene of the third act would not be amiss. and for the minions of "Don John" to be over powered by numbers would make their non-resistance more reasonable. As it is, however, there is very little to find fault with and much to praise, and the appreciation of the performance, shown by the audience last evening, indi-cates that good plays only have to be put on the stage with care and good taste, and to be well acted, to prove as attractive as those which depend entirely upon the scenery and mechanical effects for success.
