a large and interesting collection of Works of American Art, especially illustrative of the progress o Chromo-Lithography in this country.

As inquiry has frequently been made "How Chromos were produced?" and how nearly they resembled their originals, a number of the best American pictures that have been so copied have been placed side by side with these copies, so that the fidelity of the work becomes apparent. A book has been prepared containing successive impressions of the various stages of Chromos as made, and other interesting information has been placed within easy reach.

Among the pictures thus contrasted are ;--

Whittier's "Barefoot Boy."
