SPANISH PERPLEXITIES.

THE difficulties in the way of a permanent settlement of affairs in Spain appear to increase instead of diminish as time advances; and a succession of delays, uncertainties, and quarrels between the Monarchists and Republicans has served to complicate matters, and to make the present situation anything but satisfactory to those who hoped for good results from the revolution. The whole matter, however, of the expulsion of Isabella II and the government of the country, or perhaps the want of government, under the Provisional Junta or the Constitutional Cortes has been so anomalous and so extraordinary that it is not possible to form an opinion with regard to what the future of Spain will be, or whether the results of the revolution will be anarchy, to be followed by a return to despotism, or a firm, moderate, and liberal Government, capable of sustaining itself against all assaults and of affording protection to all its citizens without infringing on their liberties. In any other country than Spain there would by this time have been either a settlement of affairs by the establishment of some permanent form of government, or violent and ambitious men would have taken advantage of the occasion to bring in a reign of anarchy and Spain, however, has so long been the stronghold of conservatism that even so extraordinary an occurrence, as a political revolution and the dethronement of the legitimate sovereign has not more than half aroused the people from their lethargy; and, in view of subsequent events, the wonder is that they even succeeded in accomplishing what they did. Isabella, however, was driven out of the country, probably as much to the surprise of her enemies as to herself; but the Spaniards have not yet succeeded in selecting a successor, or even in deciding upon what form of government shall be adopted.

The Provisional Junta dallied and dallied without doing anything, and the leaders of the revolution appeared to be in no hurry to take advantage of the situation for their own aggrandizement, or to transfer their power to other hands. After months of delay the Constituent Cortes was assembled, and since then the time has been passed in dilatory discussions and fruitless quarrels, which have produced no results whatever thus far. It is true that a draft of a constitution has been reported, and from the deliberation with which it is being discussed, it ought to be eminently satisfactory to all parties, and if it is not satisfactory, it cannot cerjainly be charged that it was adopted in indiscreet haste.

The great difficulty, however, appears to be in the choice of a suitable successor for the dethroned Queen. A number of candidates have been proposed; but none of them are sufficiently unobjectionable to secure an election. Germany, the breeding place of princes, has not been equal to the present emergency; and from all her stock of young gentlemen waiting for something in the way of vacant thrones to turn up, not one has been offered to fill the first-class position that is now going begging. The choice of the Spaniards, therefore, finally narrowed down to the King of Portugal and the Duke de Montpensier. Of these, the first named appeared to be the most suitable in every way. He is a man of ability, liberal in his views, popular with his people, and apparently well suited to raise Spain to a better position among the nations of Europe than she has held for centuries. By occupying the throne of Spain, too, he might reunite that country with Portugal, and create a grand Iberian monarchy out of the peninsula. Dom Luis, however, has not made any advances; and although there is a party favorable to him, it has not pressed his claim with any vigor. Ferdinand, the father of Dom Luis, who is also a man of excellent abilities, declined positively to be a candidate, so that now the only person who has a strong body of advocates, is the Duke de Montpensier. The very strong objection against this prince, however, is that he is a member of the obnoxious Bourbon family, and the Spanlards are opposed to having a Bourbon among under any circumstances. In Constituent Cortes yesterday there was an animated debate, and it was strongly urged by Senor Figueras, one of the Republican leaders, that the only alternative left to the Cortes was to restore the Bourbons to the throne-referring to the Duke de Montpensier, probably-or to inaugurate a republic. A majority of the Cortes, however, is opposed to a republic; and one of the leaders on that side of the question contended that while the restoration of the Bourbons was an absolute impossibility, a republic would be a national calamity. and a king would yet be chosen. A somewhat similar debate took place some days ago, and it

The Republican party is certainly gaining in strength; and while the friends of free institutions would not like to see such an experiment attempted in Spain and fall, yet as matters now stand, and as it appears to be equally difficult to effect a settlement in any shape, it would perhaps be better to organize a republican government, that would have the confidence and support of the best men in the nation, than to have a make-shift monarchy, with a king who pleased nobody. While it is impossible to even guess what the morrow will bring forth in Spain. we can only hope that whatever course may be decided upon, the cause of liberty will be advanced, and that a new impetus will be given to the advance of liberal ideas which will have an influence in all the other countries of Europe.

was inferred from General Prim's conduct that he would not decline being a candidate for the presidency of a republic.

WHATEVER MAY be the merits or demorits of Sprague's distribes in the Senate, the time has gone by for the suppression of free speech in the National Councils, and the threat of Senator Abbott, of North Carolina, that he would seek satisfaction outside of the chamber for words spoken in debate, deserves a severe rebuke. The country is ready to tolerate all manner of ridiculous wars of words, however much it may be pained at unseemly exhibitions in its highest legislative chamber; but what is said there must be answered there by arguments, statements, or sidicule, and not by bludgeons or bullets.

class of dangerous criminals are beyond the reach of the law in Philadelphia, and that they can commit, with impunity, the most terrible offenses. When attempts are made to arrest them they assault policemen, and if they are at last duly summoned to answer in court, they give bail for an appearance which is never made, and the ball-money thus forfeited is usually no: sued out. The proceedings of the Court of Quarter Sessions yesterday indicates that Judge Browster is determined to break up these practices. Some time ago ex-Reserve Policeman James G. Hill was directed to arrest the renowned Jimmy Haggerty, and he subsequently alleged that, in the effort to make this arrest, he was fiercely assaulted by the offender and his attendant friends. As he was seriously wounded in the contest, he brought against Haggerty the charge of assault and battery with intent to kill, and he visited various newspaper offices to inpress them with the importance of a vigorous prosecution of this case, on the ground that if Haggerty was allowed to murderously assault policemen when they were attempting to discharge an important official duty, men of his stamp would soon set the laws completely at deflance. Subsequently, certain stringent orders of Mayor Fox led to the arrest of Haggerty, who duly arraigned at last, gave ball in a large sum for his appearance before the Court of Quarter Sessions. For some inexplicable reason, Hill, who a short time ago was anxious to prosecute Haggerty, relented, and when a bill was sent to the Grand Jury he requested the District Attorney to enter a nolle prosequi which that officer properly refused to do, whereupon, in the reported language of the judge, "Hill then appeared before the Grand Jury, and by the negligent manner in which his evidence was given, the bills were ignored." In the ordinary course of affairs, the whole matter would have ended here, and the thieves, blackguards, and murderous sowdies of the city would have been strengthened in the conviction that it is entirely safe to defy all attempts at arrest, by assaulting policemen, provided you have influential backers, and know how to soften the heart of the prosecutor and to

THE HAGGERTY-HILL CASE.

Judge Brewster, however, has wisely concluded that "the public have an interest in this matter." It is time to decide whether the police force, maintained at an immease expense, can be set at defiance by bold rufflans, and whether any gang of rascals is powerful enough to brave the official army of the city. In the case under consideration, the Judge peremptorily ordered the Deputy Sheriff to proceed and sell the property of the enterprising individual who had become ball for Haggerty, and he also directed an attachment to issue to bring Mr. Hill before the Court, so that further light may be thrown upon these proceedings.

Judge Brewster deserves the thanks of the community for this action. The point at issue is one which deeply involves the maintenance of order and the protection of life and property. If the precedent is fully established that a favored class can commit crime with impunity and laugh to scorn all efforts to arrest them, we may as well acknowledge the supremacy of the rule of outlaws at once, and submit in future to any outrages they choose to inflict.

THE GREAT GUNS of the Canadian Parliament are preparing to fire some of their heaviest shots at us. Chandler's flaming annexation speech in the Senate has thoroughly aroused the orators over the great lakes. To-day, according to the notice given in the Canadian House of Commons on Wednesday, a resolution will be presented claiming an indemnity from the United States for the expense incurred in defending the frontier against the threats of those terrible fellows called Fenians. We can see no objection to this course. If Canada feels aggrieved, let her present her grievance. It will be respectfully listened to, and when all its details are spread out, we will present our own claim for indemnity for the harboring of Rebel agents and deserters during the civil war. The expenses incurred by our neighbors in defending their borders against scarecrows will constitute a mere drop in the bucket in comparison with the injury inflicted upon the United States by Canadian sympathy with the Rebellion.

SPRAGUE indulged in another tirade yesterday against cutthroats, thieves, and puppy dogs, which elegant and classical terms he applied to certain of his constituents and colleagues. Unfortunately for the dignity of the Senate, Sprague was sworn in for a second term of six years on the 4th of March last. The country and the Senate will therefore be compelled to submit for an indefinite period to his disreputable slang. The population of Rhode Island is about one-twentieth that of Pennsylvania, and yet the two States have an equal representation and an equal vote in the Senate. This is one of the beauties of our Federal system, and is brought out in very vivid light when such men as Sprague and Saulsbury find their way into the Senate from petty States with a mere handful of people.

THE proposition made in City Councils yesterday, that the Mayor be requested to designate a day of thanksgiving, to commemorate the universal joy of the citizens at the adjournment of the Legislature, unfortunately failed for want of a quorum. The people will rejoice none the less, however, individually, over their deliverance from legislative thraldom; and they will hereafter look back upon the 16th of April as a day not less joyful in the annals of the State than the days signalized by the withdrawal of the British army and the defeat of the Rebels at Gettysburg.

QUEBEC, which has enjoyed the reputation of being a very staid sort of a city, is ripe for aunexation to the modern Babylon. At a special meeting of the City Council yesterday, the city fathers fell upon each other with fists and revolvers in a style which would have reflected credit upon the Common Councilmen of New York city.

THE PRODUCTS OF COLORADO during the year 1868 are set forth in the following statement:-The shipments, not including reshipments, nor that taken by private hands, were of gold, $1,909,461; silver, $197, 744; total, $2,107,235. The number of acres in cultivation was, in wheat, 7410; corn, 10,834; oats, barley, etc., 3709; potatoes, 1966; total, 23,919 acres. The yield averaged 28 bushels of wheat, 25 bushels of corn, 35 bushels of barley and oats, and 100 bushels of potatoes to the acre. Several districts, however, are not included in these returns. The value of the agricultural products is put down at $2,683,840 -exceeding that of the shipments of bullion by half a million of dollars.
