From Fun.

It comes under the title of Lodging House very strictly, because certain classes use it regularly at certain periods, and for a considerable length of time. That most mysterious season of all seasons, "The Season," brings high tide to the hotel. Other seasons vary, as we have good reason to know, for autumn takes up so much of the space belonging to winter sometimes that winter has to take all the bedelothes off spring to get his fair turn-in, as the spring of 1869 can testify.

But if early roses are nipped in the spring of '69, and crocuses don't show as they ought, while snowdrops are altogether at a discount, the invariable season of our hotel, governed by the session of Parliament, which is the sun that warms its system, comes round with the regularity of the tax-gatherer.

The gentleman who figures here is sure to be at the hotel. Voyelis Voat, Esq., M. P., must be at his post to bear his share of the Atlantean load of Popular Government. Mrs. V. V., and the young V. V.'s, male and female, insist on it; and he can afford it-but prefers to stay at an hotel. A town residence would not suit him, and would offer temptations to his wife and family, so he takes his pleasure-and businesssadly at the Great Thingumbob (a term by which we will, if you please, designate the sesquipedallan subject of our notice). Voat is a most harmless duffer in the House. The whip of his party loves him; for he knows he has no opinions, and is always ready to go into the Lobby to which he is halload. He may be a prosperous manufacturer, or an old country gentleman-we only know he is a staunch adherent, and that he makes his family happy, spends his money, and does his duty with the least pleasure to himself and the greatest comfort to every one else.

THE CAT: A STUDY.

From the French of Victor Hugo. The cat is the concrete symbol of a vacillating politician.

It is always on the fence !

It is the feline embodiment of one of the profoundest human principles wrenched from the circumambience of the Unknown, and hurled into the bosom of consciousness.

Nine tailors make one man. A cat has nine times the life of one man, for it has nine lives. Possession, also, is nine points of the law. Behold a legal possession of existence equal to the span of eighty-one clothiers' lives.

Let us bow reverently before this august fact. The wanderer by the midnight seashore, when the moon-that argent cornucopeia of heavenis streaming forth her flowers and fruits of radiance, and the illimitable is illuminated by the ineffable, will have remarked the phosphorescent ridges that scintillate along the billows' tops, until the breakers seem to curve and snort like horses' necks with manes of lightning clad.

So, O man, when, in the darkness of thine own chamber, thou passest thine haad along the furry spine of this fellne phantom of the backyard, the electric sparks dart forth, and a flash of lightning fuses together the fingers and the far.

Exquisite antithesis of Nature! The fireside embraces the ocean. The hearthtsone is paved with seashells. The monsters of the deep disport reflected in the glowing embers. The infinite Abroad is brought into amalgamation with the finite At Home.

The ocean roars.

The cat only purrs.

The billows rise and culminate and break. The cat's back rises. The feline tide is up, and we have a permanent billow of fur and flesh. O impossible coexistences of uncontradictory contradictions!

The Duke of Wellington was pronounced the greatest captain of his age. General Grant is pronounced the greatest captain of his.

The greatest captain of any age was the Captain with his Whiskers.

Let us not call this the tergiversation of history. Call it rather the tergiversation of nature. The whiskers of the captain.

The whiskers of the cat.

The hirsute exponent of martial supremacy. The feline symbolism of the Bearded Lady, crossing her claws before the family fire. Jealousy has been called the green-eyed nonster.

The cat is the green-eyed mouser.

Both lie in wait. Neither destroys its victim without toying with it. One is the fox, the other the friend of the fireside. Either is to be met with in almost every family. Each is of both sexcs.

"Old Tom" gin, in excess, is one of man's bitterest bibulous foes; man is the bitterest bibulous foe of Old Tom cats. The one puts the bricks into the hats of the second, to be shied at the heads of the third.

O osculations between sky and earth ! O lips of the Seen touching the lips of the Unseen ! O wave of thought careering through the asymptotes of cloudiand, crystallizing inte angelic foci the tangents of humanity. The stars are out at night. So are the cats ! "L'HOMME QUI RIT."

This is Monsieur Chose. He Is decore, and wears his little bit of ribbon constantly, without being in the least conscious that lots of English people fancy it is only the lining showing. Why does he come to England, and live at an expensive hotel? Upon my word, I don't know; especially as every Euglishman vows that Paris is such a delightful city ! To judge from his tight-fitting costume, an inspiration for freedom is not the thing you would suspect him of. No ! He is looking after an English marriage, I fancy. He wants to wed one of our blonde "meeses"-not because he is in need of money, but because he likes our fresh, honest English beauty. He is a standing protest against the sweeping condemnation of English girls, which an Englishwoman was splteful enough to write, and an Englishman was silly enough to admit into a high-class paper, under the catchpenny title of "The Girl of the Period."

Here you have the girl of a very much other period. This is the Dowager Lady Pincher. She nips herself and her household during the rest of the year in order to come to town in the season. The trial of the manufacturer of Beauty-for-Ever was a cloud to Lady P. The incarceration of that most necessary personage made her ladyship undecided about her periodical visit to London, until she reflected

We can only select one more sample from this great hotel-hive. It is the Hon, and Rev. Algernon Reredos-a gentleman every inch of him, and rector of a small country parish, with a good income. He is about seventh from a peerage, so he is well connected; and as he keeps three curates, in order to conduct the service "properly," he may well be allowed to run up to town in season to see his relations. But he does not idle even when in town; for though he goes to Lady Mountbang's receptions, he assists at a favorite church in town on Sundays, and does a little district-visiting in the morning. It might almost be supposed that he went to her ladyship's balls as a penance, for he never dances save once a year, not because he disapproves of it, but because he does not like it. But once a year he leads out his head-farmer's wife in a quadrille at the Harvest Home, which he has converted from a vulgar debauch into a pleasant association of all classes; and which, by his presence among the workers, he connects in their mind with a recognition of the Great Source of plenteous harvest. Does anybody grudge this simple, carnest, hardworking gentleman a little holiday among his kith and kin? He never grudges anyone else a holiday-indeed, would give the working classes more recreation days if he could. He is, very likely, "over the heads" of his parishioners, but he has, somehow, found his way to their hearts; and they are guided more by the latter than the former. Whether he ever dreams in his remote village of becoming a bishop, thanks to his connections, I cannot say. If he does, I have no doubt he chalks out for himself an active career, no less than he counts on the season in town.

But the porter of the Great Thingumbob Hotel has had his suspicions roused by the earnest way in which we have eyed the lodgers of that vast caravanserai, so we had better retire.

EACH TO HIS POST .- A good story is told with regard to a "daft" man and a somnolent congregation. Whenever any of his hearers began to "nod," the minister observed that "daft Jamie" aroused them somewhat sharply by shooting pease at them. Catching the eye of the delinquent at last, he shook his finger at him reprovingly; but "Jamie" responded, not a whit abashed, "Just gaug on wi' your sermon, minister, and I'll keep the beggars waukin'."

NEW MUSIC .- An ugly old bachelor suggests that births should be published under the head of "New Musle."

A thief of funny tastes lately entered a house in Springfield and carried off two sets of false teeth and a pair of gold-bowed spectacles,

It is a good thing to be above-board, but generally a bad thing to be overboard.
