V .- GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS. 1. Whenever any holder of currency, whether mutilated or not, shall present the same, put up in accordance with these regulations, in sums not lnss than fifty dollars, to any officer or bank required to redeem currency, it shall be the duty of such officer or bank to receive such parcel, and at their option either pay the owner its value in money or give a receipt conditioned for such payment when proceeds of the parcer shall be received from the Treasurer of the United States. When the same depositor shall habitually present for redemption currency not mutilated, in sums somewhat less than fifty dollars, with the evident intention of evading the regulation, it shall be discretionary with the officer or bank to whom the deposit is presented to refuse to receive the amount until it is made up to at least fifty dollars.

2. Notes of national banks which have gone into voluntary liquidation and deposited money for the redemption of their outstanding circula tion, and notes of national banks which have failed, are redeemed by the Treasurer of the United States on presentation, and when mutilated will be redeemed by him, under these rules, as United States notes; provided that the owner pays all express charges attendant upon their presentation. Notes of all other national banks, whether mutilated or not, are redeemable only by the bank which issued them

3. Before currency is presented for redemp-tion, notes torn in pieces should be restored by pasting; but in ascertaining the value of mutilated currency, no allowance will be made for fragments not parts of the same note, attached to each other for the purpose of avoiding a de-
