THE DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH-PHILADELPHIA. THURSDAY, JULY 8, 1869.

NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

NEW YORK, July 8, 1869. The New York reporter, if he would make anything of a living, must be a very industrious animal. He must never dream of going to bed until 9 o'clock in the morning, and he may account .himself exceedingly happy if he accomplishes that feat for one month consecutively. The salaries of reporters being rather limited, not averaging over fifteen dollars per week, he must write for several papers if he would do more than keep body and soul together. He must be continually on his feet, if it is only to keep his hand in. The fire and police reporter is especially goaded in this respect. Every paper of any protensions has at least one man known as the fire-and-police reporter, whose duty it is to attend to nothing but the matters indicated by those two words, fire and police. He has to visit all the police courts every day, and to occupy the reporters' room at police headquarters every night, from halfpast 10 until half-past 1. If, between those hours, an alarm of fire sounds, he will consult his own judgment as to whether it is necessary to repair to the scene of conflagration, and woe to him if that judgment mislead him ! If he yield to the allurements of supineness and prefers settling himself in a reporter's chair, with the back of his head against the wall, and his feet elevated on the desk opposite, well and good; only he must bear the brunt of being eclipsed next morning. Ten to one, some less sleepy hand will have furtively repaired thither and devastated a notebook in the endeavor to create a fire-fiend sensation. To make a hit, by flood or fire, must always be his prominent idea.

The reporter's room at police headquarters, where King Kennedy reigns, in' Mulberry street, is a low, square room in the south basement. It faces front, and has two windows protected by thick iron bars. Its floor is bare; a small platform raised a step high runs along the part of the room nearest the windows, and the furniture consists solely of deaks and chairs, and not too many of either. Each of the principal and all of the unprincipled newspapers have desks and chairs. Each reporter is furnished with a deadlatch key whereby he lets himself in at any hour of the day or night. One reporter from each paper is likewise provided by the Paid Fire Department with a fire-badge, which secures him admission within the cordon in cases of fire. These fire-badges are comparatively a new institution, "having been in use only a bout a year. The are "scrumptious" in design, and effect just the purpose they were intended to-that of excluding from tres all persons not wearing them or other badges provided by the department, or not otherwise entitled to admission. The fire duties of the police and fire reporters may be defined to extend between two o'click in the afternoon and two in the morning. Their police duties are also often exceedingly oncious. At the three principal city police courts-the Tombs, the Jefferson Market, and the Essex Market-the principal business of the day is transacted between ten and twelve and two and four, and, if the reporter is conscientious, he will naturally wish to know precisely what has taken place at court during those four hours. It also frequently happens that while one case is being tried open court, another that has been good while on the tapis, and has grown very complicated and tedious, or that is of a nature which asks for more private inquiry, is being investigated in the magistrate's private room. Al these cases must be listened to, and their general drift understood by the reporter. He is thus brought into intimate familiarity with every species of crime. There is no villainy perpetrable by man, woman, or child but what comes under his cognizance during a long experience. I have often, in bygone days, watched the silver head of one of the Herald's staunchest criminal reporters, and wondered what that man's notion of human nature was. There he sits at his desk, or perambulates into the magistrate's private room, year after year, in close contact with every species of vice that can be named among men, and yet remains a most unimpeachable and respect able of 1 p rion-his silver hair combed virtuously, his well pared nails as clean as penknife and piety can make them, his shoes beaming with religion quite as much, I am sure, as with French polish, and his black clothes as sleek as though the oil from Aaron's beard had run down them. I won't say whether it is at the Tombs, or at the Essex, or the Jefferson he sits, year after year, but the old owl is a bird of most rigid virtue, and is generally seen paring apples between sessions.

The reporters have two places of rendezvous. One of them is the reporters' room of police headquarters, and the other is a little room leading out of the Coroner's office. Here they deal out the gossip and scandal of the day, jog each other's memories, and borrow one another's note-books. These amenities do not belong to all, however. The newcomer has to work himself into the "ring," for in the world of reporters, as in every other world in New York, there exists a "ring." If he cannot accomplish this he is not apt to meet with much success, for the New York reporter is notoriously grasping and selfish, and will only give to those from whom he hopes to gain as much or more. This ring is very exclusive. It embraces some of the best men of the best papers, and no one is admitted unless he proves his right by creating some "success" in the newspaper he represents. Perhaps it is well that this exclusiveness should be preserved, since it stimulates the new-comer, and makes him achieve more than he otherwise would. Until he is admitted into that ring he is regarded as rather a poor creature. When he does something to exalt his name his merit is recognized, and he is received with open arms.

New York reporters are intensely jealous of Phila delphia intruders, and try to "scrunch" 'em all they can. They are lealous of the growing influence of Philadelphians in this city. At the time of the Young imbroglio all the small spites and nasty scandals of Bohemian New York came floating along the fetid stream of the lower order of reporters.

There are two newspapers around which this order of reporters swarms, and those two newspapers are the extremes of one another. One of them is the Tri ane, and the other the Sunday Meroury. There are no other papers in New York that furnish so much employment to Bohemians-poor, tattered, wornout, journalistic bummers, whose breaths smell of Blackwell's Island and the station house, and whose dirt-cased fingers shake like digitatorial aspens. Not but what there are plenty of talented, able, and in every respect gentlemanly employes in the reportorial departments of these newspapers, but the assignment system is retained there to a great extent, and wherever the assignment system obtains there will the Bohemians be gathered together.

'The reporter's life in New York is not an easy one. Every dollar he earns represents good solid cubic work. He may not excel in putting words together grammatically, but he is great on getting facts. When you get the reporter who is equally perfect in fact and phraseology, you get the artist, and you don't get him at all in New York, for directly he learns to unite these two qualities he floats out of the repertorial sphere and ascends to higher realms. Whilst he remains in that sphere, the influences that surround him tend to anything rather than to refine and humanize him. Vice, slang, cynicism, the constant company of his own sex-these are the evils forced upon him, which would tend to prevent his becoming or remaining a gentleman-although there are gentiemen in that as there are in every New York newspaper sphere. But the difference between the average New York and the average Philadelphia reporter is very marked indeed. ALI BABA.
