THE DEMOCRATIC GUBERNATO RIAL CANDIDATE.

Our horoscope of the Democratic State Convention has been substantially verified. A letter from General Hancock declining the Gubernatorial nomination was produced. The Cass men made a strong effort in behalf of their favorite candidate, but, after a few preliminary demonstrations of the overpowering strength of Asa Packer, he was nominated by a large majority. Some months ago, when he first consented to become a candidate, the belief prevailed that he would encounter no scrious opposition, and his friends were considerably surprised at the active resistance to h's pretensions which was subsequently devoloped. They have mastered it by a resolute effor, however, and he will no doubt receive the cordial support of his party. The bioet phical sketch we published on Monday - a good outline sketch of his career, and annecessary to recapitulate the facts which our readers are already r. There is much to commend in his character. His industry, integrity, entorpuise, and liberality are unquestionable. in has amassed the largest private fortune in State, mainly by his connection with ent lises which have facilitated the developmax of its resources, and the labors of his life have been of an unusually practical and u ful nature. He is a great railway king, and comething of a politician, but his chief t ..... to Democratic favor is to be found in his hu iness success. Some years ago, when the New York Herald elaborately advocated the 1 mination of "Live-oak" George Law for the Presidency, the proposition was ridiculed throughout the country. And when General Grant offered to A. T. Stewart, the famous limporter, the position of Secretary of the Treasury, the Democratic press considered this selection singularly unfortunate. Yet Asa Packer has now been made the Democratic nominee for Governor of Pennsylvania for reasons substantially similar to those on which Law's Presidential aspirations and Stewart's appointment as a member of the Cabinet were based. There is nothing in Judge Packer's barren political record which would have won the favor of his party. He was a silent member of the Legislature, and when in Congress he did not merely refrain from speech-making, but during a large portion of his term he was not even present to attend the sessions of that body. His large business interests absorbed so much of his time and attention, that he frequently failed to respond to the call for yeas and nays. With a fortune trembling in the balance of financial revulsions and industrial revolutions, he had little disposition to listen attentively to dry debates, or to study closely the thousand and one details which make up the sum and substance of legislation. If he should be elected Governor, it will not be at all astonishing if he will be at Harrisburg, as he was at Washington, much more deeply interested in the multiform affairs of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company than in the batch of laws spawned by the Legislature, or the general welfare of the Commonwealth. Aside from partisan considerations, one of the strongest objections to his election is to be found in the magnitude of his personal interests, and the watchful care which he will naturally be disposed to bestow upon them. While his enormous wealth places him beyond the reach of the ordinary pecuniary temptations, the public can scarcely expect that his heart will not be with his treasures, or that he could bring to the duties of the executive chamber the singleness of devotion to the Commonwealth which would characterize the administration of a model Governor. Politically, Judge Packer has been a faithful follower of the Democracy through all its devious windings. Living in one of the strongest Democratic districts of the Union, his political action has always been in strict consonance with the majority of those by whom he has been surrounded, and he has clung to his party right or wrong. When the troubles of Kansas originally commenced, no man had a better opportunity than himself to comprehend the iniquity of the Border-Ruffian movements, for the first Governor of that Territory, A. H. Reeder, was his especial friend; but though he endeavored to shield Reeder from some of the persecutions to which he was subjected, Judge Packer soon learned to yield unquestioning obedience to the unjust dictates of Southern arrogance, after the infaraous crusade against freedom in Kansas was made a test of partisan fidelity. He will doubtless prove a blind follower of his party leaders in the future as he has in the past, and it is as a representative of the Democracy that he must be judged by the people of Pennsylvania in the coming election. The platform on which he was nominated reaffirms some of the old heresies of the organization, and forces into the canvass the main issues which now divide the people of the nation; and in triumph or defeat he will be a devoted adherent of the false guides who have inflicted so many miseries upon the nation.

separate vote four sections of the constitution, one of which provides that "the credit of the State shall not be pledged or loaned in aid of any person, association, or corporation, nor shall the State hereafter become a stock holder in any corporation," and the other; disfranchise participants in the Rebellion. The constitution, without these sections, is in accordance with the reconstruction laws passed by Congress; and by offering the people of the State an opportunity to decide upon them separately, the President will doubtless secure the adoption of the constitution with all its essential features, which will entitle the representatives of Mississippi to present themselves for admission at the next session of Congress. While the condition of affairs in Mississippi and other of the unreconstructed States is not all that could be desired, yet there is a very general feeling throughout the country that the completion of the work of reconstruction ought not to be much longer delayed. Over four years have now elapsed since the downfall of the Rebellion; we have a President in the chair in whose integrity of purpose the people have confidence, and it certainly seems as if the time had arrived for the adoption of a liberal policy towards the South. So long as the late Rebel States are unrepresented in Congress, so long will the development of their resources be delayed and all their industries retarded; dissatisfaction will prevail, and the dominant party will be held responsible for all the evils of the situation. The reasons for delaying reconstruction which were forcibly urged while Andrew Johnson was using all the influence of the executive office to foment disturbances no longer exist, and it is even better to run all the risks involved than to continue the present unsatisfactory state of affairs.

The old Rebel element will doubtless endeavor to gain the control of the State, but this would be the case if reconstruction was postponed for an indefinite period; and our only policy is to grapple with the situation fairly, and let the contending parties fight it out on equal terms. There is every probability that the sections of the Constitution excepted by the President will be defeated, as those of similar character were in Virginia, in which case the President ought to give all the aid that he properly can to the radicals, to prevent the Rebel element from gaining any ascendancy, at least until the new Constitution has had a fair trial. Between now and the date fixed for the election there is ample time for both parties to develop their strength; and as the day approaches, we will be better able to judge what the effect of the President's concessions is likely to be.

THE SPANISH COLONIES.

THE Spanish difficulties appear to increase instead of diminishing. The regency, to all appearances, does not work as well as it might. and gives satisfaction to neither the monarchists nor the Republicans. Serious disturbances exist in various parts of the country, which give the Government much trouble. The Regent has already been obliged to reorganize his Cabinet, and the richest of the colonial provinces of Spain in the New World, Cuba, is in a state of revolution which the mother country is apparently unable to suppress, and to supplement these difficulties we have the intelligence that an insurrection has broken out in the island of Madeira, and that a republic has been proclaimed. Troops have been sent to put down the revolutionists, but Spain has need of all her soldiers at home, and it is doubtful whether a sufficient force can be sent to produce any material effect. The great colonial empire which Spain once held has slipped piece by piece from her grasp, and there is no doubt that it would be a positive benefit to both parties if she would consent to give up the few remnants that are still in her possession. It is difficult, however, for a nation to relinquish any of its possessions, although expediency and sound policy may point to it as the most judicious course to pursue. Except, perhaps, a few naval stations for a great maritime power, colonial dependencies are anomalies in the present age. The American revolution taught England this fact, and her statesmen have again and again reiterated that, when Canada and Australia are really to sever their connection with the mother country, there will be no obstacle placed in their way; France and Russia came to the same conclusion when they sold their American possessions to the United States, and if the Spanish Government would make up its mind to give up Cuba and Madeira, it would have no cause to regret the action. The insurrection in Madeira is a curious indication of the growth of republican ideas; and, like the Cuban revolt, it is a legitimate result of the Spanish revolution. If the men who snatched the power from Isabella II had acted with generosity and fairness towards the colonies, they might have retained them without difficulty; but, as the matter now stands, the colonists feel that they have participated in none of the benefits of the revolution, and they have accordingly struck for their independence, with every prospect of success.

THE VISIT OF PRINCE ARTHUR. - The Canadiana are all in a flutter of super-loyal excitement in anticipation of the expected visit of Prince Arthur, the third son of Queen Victoria, and on his arrival there will undoubtedly be a grand jubilation, in which the colonial heart will overflow with gratitude towards this scion of royalty for his condescesion in visiting their shores. The young man will probably extend his tour through the United States, and he should receive a cordial but not an adulatory welcome on all sides. We have a number of serious grievances against England, but that is no reason why we should behave in any other than the most hospitable manner towards this member of the royal family; indeed, it would be inconsistent with the American character to be anything else than cordial; but there are reasons, political as well as personal, why we should not indulge in any excessive demonstrations. About Prince Arthur very little is known; his character has scarcely had time to develop yet, but he is said to be much more popular than his elder brother, the prospective King of England. It is to be hoped that he will turn out less of a scapegrace.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

PRESIDENT GRANT has issued an order designating Tuesday, November 30, as the day upon which the new constitution of Mississippi, adopted on the 15th of May, 1868, at Jackson, is to be submitted to the people of the State for ratification. The President, by authority of the act of Congress passed at the close of the last session, has submitted to a

THE SENGESFEST. - The Sangerfest, at Baltimore, came to a conclusion yesterday in a manner satisfactory to all the participants. Our citizens will be pleased that one of the first-class prizes, a Knabe piano, valued at $1500, was won by the Young Mannerchor of Philadelphia. The musical performances throughout the entire festival are described as being of a very high character, and such assemblages of singers frequently held cannot but have a beneficial effect on the musical culture of the country. The most important moral to be drawn from this and other Sengerfests that have been held during the last ten years is that it is possible for a large number of men to meet and enjoy themselves in a rational and intelligent manner without having the pleasures of the occasion marred by disturbances and rioting. The Germans, while having their own pleasure uppermost in their minds, are entitled to the gratitude of good citizens of every degree for the good influences which such festivals as that just concluded unquestionably exert.
