STATE CONVENTION

A Half-and-half Arrangement-What it Did, and How it Did it-The "B'hoys" only Half Suppressed-The Candidate for the Supreme Court.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HARRISBURG, July 14. After a hard day's labor in the cause of "Retrenchment and Reform," the representatives of the State Democracy as I write are dodging between the drops of a slow drizzling rain, on their way from the State Capitol to the hotels. The day opened with a cloud upon her brow, and she draws near her end in tears. But this lachrymosity does not affect the stout hearts of the men upon whom have been centred the eyes of the unterrified masses throughout the State to day. Their labor had no sooner been completed than they discovered the wonderful attractiveness of such a pretty alliteration as is contained in the words "Packer and Pershing." The accident of these two p's in conjunction will cost their opponents many a vote. So, despite the drizzling rain, the town is overflowing with enthusiasm, and squads of Offenbachian admirals are perambulating the streets. dispensing Offenbachian strains, with troops of the unterrified tagging after them in the most jubilant

The hour appointed for the assembling of the con vention was 10 o'clock, but there appeared to be no hurry about it, and it was well that such was the case, for it was worth almost as much as the valuation of one's life to effect an entrance into the hall. Some of the leading men of the party had made up their minds to keep out as much of the disorderly element as was possible. Hence no one was to be admitted without a ticket, and to obtain the ticket to which one was entitled it was necessary to devote a half hour, beginning with the stroke of 8, to about as heavy a pressure as the human frame is capable of bearing, without sustaining a very serious marring of its symmetrical proportions. But this was nothing compared to the task of getting into the hall. One of the delegates stated that it took him a full half grouped about the entrance. Still, he made his way through them without sustaining any finan- table or imaginary Pandemonium. cial damage, while others, and notably ex-Senator Buckalew, found themselves at the door only to discover that not a beggarly cent remained in their pockets. When the crowd of light-fingered gentry was penetrated, one found himself face to face with two burly, hard-fisted individuals who had because they were the roughest of the rough themselves, and were quite as willing as able to knock down and drag out any unlucky wight whose pasteboard credentials were not entirely satisfactory to them. When it came to the afternoon session, the precautions at the entrances were redoubled, and several delegates of respectable bearing submitted to the indignity of being lifted in at the windows by the legs and arms in preference to passing the ordeal at the doors. One of the delegates urged as a reason against the holding of an evening session the trouble of getting into the hall, and declared, with a sarcastic reference to the customs prevailing in Philadelphia, that he would as soon be thrown out of the rindow as dragged in through it by the legs, and would suffer either infliction in preference to attempting to walk in through the doorway.

While awaiting the calling to order of the convention, that perfect type of red-hot Democracy, yelept "Brick" Pomeroy, was escorted about the hall and introduced to the more ambitious of the delegates, "Brick" was in brilliagt trim. His fingers were loaded down with rings, in which glittered monstrous stones of various bues, and in his shirt-front was displayed a gorgeous cross of corresponding splendor. This shirt-front was cut remarkably low-so low, in fact, that it imparted a sailor-like aspect, and justified some of the delegates from the wilds of the interior in supposing that the distingue stranger was nobody other than the chivalrie Semmes, of the late C. S. A. Navy.

During the morning session, the delegates gene rally comported themselves so quietly and orderly that the injunction previously placed upon the rough-and-ready element was in fair way of enforcement. But at the outset there was a slight disturbance. The Hancock men were so few in numbers that only a flank movement of some sort could give them any hope of success. So they attempted to smuggle into the hall the huge transparency inscribed "Ohio has her Rosecrans—give Pennsylvania her Hancock." The movement was at once detected, and as soon as the attention of Mr. Wallace, the acting Chairman, was called to it, he peremptorily ordered it to be withdrawn. The ever-ready McMullin pulled up his coat-sleeves and plunged towards the cause of dissension. But before he could lay violent hands upon it, the discovery was made that both Cass and Packer banners had been suspended over the very head of Wallace, and the order given in ignorance of this circumstance was at once revoked. The Alderman, however, was bent upon doing something, and so he grasped the transparency, and triumphantly bore it to the front, the Hancock men in the lobby meanwhile raising a fearful din. It was at this point that Wallace jumped to his feet, and declared that there had been quite enough of rowdyism witnessed in Democratic conventions of late, and that it was desirable to have

Soon after, Wallace was called upon to retreat from the chair by the selection of a temporary President, and he embraced the opportunity to expound briefly the true basis of the Democratic faith. He dwelt, also, at some length upon the fact that he had wielded the Democratic baton for three years, but was ominously silent upon his achievements with the famous coffee-pot with which his name is so closely associated. The morning finally were away without the accomplishing of anything, and a little before noon a recess until two o'clock was voted, but not without encountering the most determined opposition.

The ceremony of running the gauntlet at the doors or of being lifted in at the windows was so tedious, that it was half-past two o'clock before the convention was again called to order. The first important business was the installation of ex-United States Senator Charles R. Buckslew as permanent President. He at once proceeded to deliver himself of a very elaborate oration, in the course of which he expounded at length the true Democratic theory of government, and wound up with a stathing and bitter as ault upon the present Governor of the Commonwealth, whom, to use a trite expression he handled without gloves, and without mercy, as well, Then came a long and vexatious delay, pending the deliberations of the Committee on Resolutions. The convention disposed of two or three contested seats, and a few other triffing incidentals, during the day: but finally so completely exhausted all these means of diversion, that it was forced, for the sake of killing time, to formally declare its willingness to listen to a harangue from the Hon. Richard Vanx. Richard was in town, but unhapply he was not in the hall, and just as despair was seizing the convention, and manifesting its presence by a deal of confusion, the nine planks which had been selected to constitute the platform were borne into the hall by the comittee of thirty-three which had been charged with

When the resolutions, as soundly Democratic as the most Demogratic heart present appeared to desire, had been unanimously adopted, the convention went about the task of nominating the candidates. The name of General George W. Cass was placed in nation, without eliciting the faintest response. But that of Asa Packer was received with loud shouts from the floor and the waving of white hats in the background. General McCandless elicited considerable applause, and General Winfield S. Hancock threw the lobbies into a wild tumult. Before

DEMOCRACY. it had died away Alderman McMullin stepped to the front, shook his hand gravely and gently, and remarked, with a strict approach to the truth, "That's

But there was a still higher authority than that of the Alderman for pronouncing the whole Hancock movement an "outside" one. A letter signed by him was produced from one of the recesses of Wallace's coffee-pot, in which he distinctly declared that he would not consent to be a candidate. Hancock fell by his own hand. If any one authorized to speak for him had announced his willingness to run, there is little doubt that he would have received the nomination ultimately, although not without encountering the bitterest opposition. As it was, several of his more ardent admirers declared their determination to vote for him in spite of the letter, and in spite of Wallace's protest against the perpetration of what he was pleased to term a downright outrage. Amidst the uproar of the contending factions which the letter called into being, could be heard the voice of the Alderman from the Fourth ward, crying, "Let 'em vote for 'im, if they want to!" And vote for him they did. The second ballot was completed, the result duly announced, and a dozen Packerites on the floor clamoring to have it made unanimous, before the Chair could be made to comprehend the fact that 131 votes had been recorded, while but its delegates were in the convention. An indescribable scene of confusion ensued, the disorder being so great that Alderman McMullin flew about the hall, screaming "Order! order! sit down! sit down!" without making the slightest impression. A majority were finally persuaded that such a questionable record as this superfluous vote presented should not be suffered to appear in print, and the ballot was ordered to be expunged from the minutes. The ballot was then retaken, it being apparently understood by Judge Packer's friends that, as General Hancock's name was withdrawn, everybody could vote for Packer. thereby both rectifying the record and making the nomination unanimous. Only ten of General Cass' admirers availed themselves of this privilege, thirty-seven of his adherents remaining faithful even to the last ditch. But the nomination was finally made unanimous by acclamation. and several of the Western delegates made short addresses, giving in their hearty and zealous adhesion, "against their will," to the candidate of the majority. One of the old war-horses from General Cass' neighborhood took occasion, in this connection, to state that he, in common with the Democracy of the West, could be trusted to do what they had never failed to do in the past, and would not fail to do in the future-"Vote the whole ticket, from head to tail!" Then came a wild and uncontrollable outhour to run the gauntlet of pickpockets who were | burst of enthusiasm, and for some minutes the scene surpassed anything ever witnessed in a veri-

During the uproarious squabble over the superfluous vote which had crept into the second ballot, Alderman McMullin had been entirely at sea. The only consistent thing he achieved was a constant appeal for "order!" and a persistent effort to induce everybody but himself to "sit down!" Aside from been selected for the task of keeping out the roughs, | this, he tendered every motion that was made his vote, before its scope could be grasped and stated by the Chair, shifting about with all the ease and grace of an accomplished and well-oiled weathercock. But as soon as the convention had tortured itself through this difficulty, he became himself again, and hammered away at the Chair until he succeeded in compelling its occupant to recognize him, and put before the convention his motion for a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening. This was ostensibly for the purpose of giving the Western delegates time to seect and concentrate upon some one from their locality for the vacancy upon the bench of the Supreme Court. But many of the delegates appeared to regard its real import to be to compel them to undergo again the torture of the doorways or the indignity of being dragged in at the windows by the legs. The Alderman fought his ground inch by inch, and at last was driven to the wall. Then the delegates indulged in the harmless and highly diverting amusement of placing in nomination for judge of the Supreme Court the name of every Democratic lawyer in the central and western part of the State who had ever been burdered with a brief. Altogether, the names of twenty-five embryo jurists were hurled at the devoted and somewhat muddled head of the chairman until he heard them. while many never reached his ears, because of the insufferable noise. But before a ballot was ordered, the list was judiciously pruned down to a round dozen, and among these the delegates scattered their support with a reckless hand. Cyrus L. Pershing, of Cambria: Rasselas Brown, of Warren: and Cyrus Clark, of Indiana, however, took the lead; and on the second ballot the number of candidates was materially reduced by formal and tacit withdrawals. The vote was about being announced, without a definite result being achieved, when the supporters of Mr. Clark began a stampede towards Pershing, which did not terminate until the latter had received a fair majority, and been declared the choice of the convention, amidst some enthusiasm for his supposed merits as a man and a lawyer, and the unquestionable merit of the alliterative battle-cry of 'Packer and Pershing."

Thus the labors of the day were brought to a happy termination, and the representatives of the State Democracy laid to their souls the flattering unction that they had covered themselves with glory, and overwhelmed their opponents with the shadow of their inevitable defeat. The nomination of Mr. Pershing elicits a great deal of enthusiasm on all sides, in and out of the now defunct convention. He is about forty-five years of age, a native and resident of Johnstown, Cambria county, and regarded as a man fully qualified for the exalted position to which he aspires. In 1861 he was elected to the State Legislature, and for five successive years represented Cambria county in the lower house, being, according to reports, recognized as the ablest and most upright man on the Democratic side of that body while a member of it. It is claimed for him that he never belittled himself, while sojourning at Harrisburg, by engaging in any of the low and dirty schemes which have brought this devoted town into such disrepute. Among other things, his friends, when pressing his claims and glorifying his success, did not forget to announce that he is an elder in the Presbyterian Church and a man of the strictest temperance habits. SOFA BED. HOVER'S PATENT is decidedly the best Sofa Bed ever invented. It can be extended from a Sofa into a handsome French Bedstead, with hair spring mattress, in ten seconds of time. It requires no unscrewing or detaching, has no separation between back and seat, no cords to break, and no hinged foot attached to the top of the back to support it when down, which is unsafe and liable to get out of repair. It has the conveniences of a bareau for holding clothing, is easily managed and it is impossible for it to get out of order.

Price about the same as an ordinary sofa.

H. F. HOVER, OWNER AND SOLE MANUFACTURER, 1 26 tuthsem No. 230 South SECOND Street.
