

NEW YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, July 19, 1899. Newspaper Office "Callers." Not a hundred miles from the City Hall Park is a newspaper office where I sometimes sit, and where "characters" are popping in from morn till night. They commence making their calls directly the office door is open, and they keep them until six o'clock at night. They are lads of New York, some of them very pleasant and quiet lads, some of them decidedly harsh and turbulent ones. They give a pleasant variety to the seclusion of that newspaper office, light up its gloom with pretty, variegated pieces of color, and contribute not a little to the spice of journalistic life there. Some of them are ladies. Here is one of them. Her name is Madame R. Once she was a celebrated prima donna singing in the principal capitals of Europe. To-day she is a decayed music-teacher who receives annually a "grand testimonial" in the shape of a concert, and who harbors the wild hallucination that her voice is as good as it was thirty years ago. The teeth which she has lost she has not replaced by artificial ones, and the squint in her eyes has become more decidedly pronounced. She is wrinkled and haggard, wears a faded grey silk dress and a black lace veil with holes in it. She has a forthcoming concert, and she also has the bronchitis, and the object of her visit to the newspaper office is to beseech a kindly ignoring of all shortcomings. "For the sake of my family," she cries, "I have a family depending upon me, and I should lose all my pupils immediately by having unkind about my voice appeared in the newspapers." So saying, she takes out some cards of admission for the next evening (the date of the concert in question), asks for a pen in order to write "complimentary" across the back of them, and leaves the office, made happy by the assurance that nothing but what is kind shall be said of her and hers. Years ago she was truly a celebrated contralto. What has become of all her savings you will ask. Alas! she never had any. A gambling, thieving husband, who went round counting the house while she was on her knees as "Amina" or "Lucrèce Borgia," swallowed up all the receipts in the treasury, and often she had not enough money in her possession to carry her from one city to another. That kind of life she led for many years, until, in France, Madame R. got too old to be anything but ridiculous on the operatic stage, and audiences laughed instead of applauding when she presented the shadow of her once-magnificent "Lucrèce." Finally she was left without a husband, without money, with few friends, and with but the scant remains of a voice that, during her many years of public life, must have brought her in half a million of dollars. Another one of these lads is a literary lard, known to all the story papers of Gotham. He is a young man of twenty-six, with blue eyes, blonde hair, black coat too short in the sleeves, black pants too short in the legs, and no linen to speak of. He has gaudy red bands, which look like for handling packing boxes, pen, ink, and paper, and he brings endless rolls of manuscript, wrapped up in brown paper, and written on both sides. He is a story-writer, earns his living by writing stories, though where they are published is an unguessable mystery, never having fathomed the mystery of his name, and never having seen published elsewhere the stories that are rejected at the office in question. But he is a knave, and he is a miser. He is sitting in City Hall Park. There he lounges on one of the fountains near the fountain, morning, noon, and night, for there, time and again, passing by at those hours, I have seen him sitting, with his eyes bent on the ground, and his chin upheld by his hands, and a brown paper parcel (without doubt a rejected MS., tucked under his arm. Perhaps it is the rejected MS. of an intended work of fiction; but if he would pick up himself a bit, and get a situation as salesman, it would be better for him. Who is this in light array, dressed expensively but not neatly, fashionably and dandy, with glaring kid gloves, and anointed with penetrating perfume? She is not an authoress. Authoresses are never ever-treated with such a degree of respect as women (those who instruct newspaper editors, at least) with frowsy hair, slouchy bonnets, and gloves a mile long. This one is brilliant and debonair, exceedingly rich in ribbons, and with a meow orotund voice. She announces her business with a fascinating assumption of modesty. It appears she has been shamefully misrepresented in the newspapers. Her name has been "slandered" before the public, and she has avoided scandal during all the years she has "devoted herself to her profession," and she has exhibited in a very repulsive light. Further information reveals the fact that she is a slack-wire performer, Madlle Rosalie Y., at one of the smaller places of amusement, and that she has been driven "almost wild" by certain scandalous reports. What she conceals under her bonnet, and what she goes away greatly mollified by the assurance that the newspaper will take no action against her. Here is a woman who wants to write religious poetry at ten cents a verse; here a man with a patent burglar-alarm that simultaneously lights a candle, rings a bell, and fires a pistol; people with patents; correspondents from all parts of the world, from Alaska to Terra-del-Fuego; aptitudes of sailing packets, who have eluded the Custom House, have India shawls to sell at a bargain; bullies who have come to try their muscle against that of the editor by whom they fancy themselves defamed; scorch-throated ministers with copies of their last Sunday's sermons; artists whose pictures have never seen the light of an exhibition; foreign bunnymen, with forged letters of introduction from suspicious persons; abused authors, intent upon a personal interview with the critic who has slashed into them—all these come tramping into the office from morn till noon, week in, week out, daily presenting new shades of character, and suggesting the question whether the supply of Gotham newspaper office-loungers will ever be exhausted. Lodge-House Signs. "For gentlemen" is the announcement figuring on many a placard pasted in the windows of lodging-houses, and meant to betray unwary bachelors. The announcement looks respectable and harmless. You feel you are entering an abode where woman is denied admission, and where all the delights of blessed "one-ness" can be enjoyed cheap. Miserable anticipations! Highbred hopes! Upon ringing the bell, you are confronted with a stout, elderly, yellow-haired woman, in a chintz dress, with yellow hair and eyes the color of pale indigo-water. Her voice, like her terms, is low, and she is the very picture of middle-aged virtue. There is a pious resignation in her sigh as she shows you the furnished apartment, and a touching submission in her voice when she confides to you the fact of her having seen better days. Before the interview is over, your heart quite warms to her, and if warmth of heart has any influence in expanding the pocket, you would no doubt pay her a month in advance before leaving the room. Your worldly prudence, however—of which you experience among New York lodging-letters has furnished you with an immense stock—holds you in wholesome check, and you content yourself with leaving her one week's rent. Installed in your new quarters, you congratulate yourself on having found, at a moderate price, the comforts of a home. In describing your room—or your suite of rooms, as the case may be—to a friend, you lay particular stress upon the fact that the furnished apartments of the house are "for gentlemen only," but before you have been evaded two weeks, you discover the trap that has been laid. You hear in the hall the trail of a petticoat and the harsh sweetness of a virago's tongue. From that moment it is all up with you. You discover that the levy of furnished apartments surrounding you are let, in the most promiscuous manner, to as many foolish virgins as are willing to pay for them. Your respectability takes the alarm. Your honest, unfeeling conscience is wounded. You blush when you meet Mrs. Fixenright, the pale-haired landlady. She has shaken your faith in human nature—to say nothing of your nerves, and henceforth you place no more reliance in placards bearing the announcement, "For Gentlemen Only."

If your quarters are otherwise comfortable, and you are averse to changing, there is a long four-handed fight between Brass and Bachelorhood, Decency and Decorum. The former two bid you stay, brazen it out with society, and defy conventionalism to do its worst; the latter urge you to flee at once, to use more discretion in choosing your next residence, and to forego the disagreeable ambiguities of a lodging-house for the modest certainties of board in a private family. The Times of yesterday had an extremely sensible article in reference to the "Theatrical Prize-Ring," the gist of which is that it is going to "shut down" in future upon all correspondence from actors and managers in regard to their personal squabbles. The Times is right. The egotistic display of grievances in "cards" written to the principal newspapers was last season carried to a ridiculous extent by theatrical people. The publication of these personal epistles, which was at first requested as a favor, is now demanded as a right. The evil has wrought its own death. Messrs. Taylor and Murray plied on the last straw, and now the dromedary is suffering from a spine disease that never will be cured. The Butter-Henderson affair was the penultimate burden, and the husband of Mrs. Henderson arrived in this country just in time to be at the death. But by being denied admission to the big newspapers—for the Times has only set the rule which the other journals in their self-defense will be compelled to observe—the theatrical letter-writers will be led to force the expression of their grievances in a new direction. Messrs. Henderson and Murray are therefore going to publish a new weekly paper, gossip says, to be called Gossamer. From the Gossamer, their names, it is true, will not appear in connection with the journal, which will sustain the same relation to actresses that the Revolution does to women in general, and whose conductors, ostensibly, will be Miss Lydia Thompson and Miss Josephine Plafide. The prospect of this journal extends an invitation to all interested actresses to send their names, and bright statements of their particular cases. The natural born blonde, the snubbed soprano, the innocently equestrian kleptomaniac, will all find an advocate in its pages. No actress, however, will be permitted to write more than one note per week, and any agent wishing to defend herself against the insinuations of the New York daily press is recommended to dictate a letter to her father's secretary, by the feminine golden-haired star whom he represents. This measure will, of course, completely hoodwink the public and the press. Besides, they have the agent's assurance that everything is on the square, and surely his word is as good as his bond! The Difficulties of Getting Washed are no slight ones to the poorer inhabitants of New York who live in tenement-houses, and scarcely know what a bath-tub means. A few spasmodic excursions have been made to supply free baths to the people, but these have been backed so efficiently by individual enterprise, and the Board of Health does just nothing at all. Baths that are paid for can be had, but these are beyond the reach of the poor classes, who are thus almost under the necessity of going unwashed from year's end to year's end. Every evening, however, hundreds of young men and boys may be seen along the docks and piers on the east side of the city, and it is not until late in the evening that they are able to bathe within the limits of the city between sunrise and sunset. The policemen who visit and inspect these docks, however, are apparently in only too much sympathy with the great unwashed, for, although these bathers lose their self-consciousness to such an extent as to remain unaffected by the sense that the eyes of the hundreds of occupants of the ferriesboats are involuntarily turned upon them while they make their evening evolutions, few arrests are ever made, and few of those made ever come to grief. Like Adam and Eve, they are "naked and not ashamed," and this is a great deal better, in my opinion, than remaining clothed and dirty. Such swimming and bathing facilities as have been supplied by private enterprise are overcrowded. The natoriums are all extremely well attended, so that affairs there may be described as progressing more than "swimmingly." ALI BABA. MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC. Philadelphia is all but unamused at the present moment, and most of our actors are recreating in the mountains or at the sea-shore, or are playing summer engagements in other cities. Mr. Owen Fawcett, the popular young comedian, is now at Selwyn's Theatre, Boston, where he has appeared as "Toby Twinkle," in All That Glitters is Not Gold, as "Fernando Villabella" in The Maid and the Magpie, as "Solon Shingle," and other favorite roles. Mr. Fawcett has appeared in company with Miss Angela, and has been well received by the Bostonians. When the Walnut Street Theatre opens for the next season, he will return to this city, and resume his old position as first low comedian at that establishment. CITY ITEMS. FARREL, HERRING & Co., No. 629 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Dear Sirs.—At the very destructive fire of Messrs. McKean & Bingham's Saw Mill, which occurred on the evening of the 6th instant in this place, the Safe manufactured by you, belonging to the late firm of E. M. Bingham & Garrison, was in the building and subjected to a very severe test, as the fire raged fiercely for several hours; and so great was the heat that the brass plates were melted off, and to our great surprise, when the Safe was opened, we found all the books and papers unharmed. Yours, respectfully, SAMUEL B. GARRISON, Late of F. M. Bingham & Garrison. FARREL, HERRING & CO., NO. 629 CHESTNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA. HERRING, FARREL & SHERMAN, No. 201 BROADWAY, New York.
