THE CALLY REPORT OF THE PRIME PHILADELPHIA, WEDNERDAY SEPTEMBER, THE DAILY EVENING TELEGRAPH-PHILADELPHIA, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1869.

FRAULEIN TINNE.

Her Reported Murder in Africa. The London Daily News, commenting upon the reported murder of Fraulein Tinne, the African traveller, observes: "Africa has exacted another victim, another sacrifice to the fascinating but deadly mysteries of her inner secret. News comes to us from Malta that the young Dutch lady, Miss Tinne, whose name has been so long connected with explorations upon the Lybian continent, and with voyages along its coast, has been murdered while voyages along its coast, has been murdered while travelling in the interior beyond Tripoli. The schooner yacht in which this enterprising gentle-woman used to sail, with its crew of dark-skinned sailors and its gay fittings, is well known among the ports of North Africa. The lady was well versed in the ways and resources of desert journeys and long, lonely expeditions by land—speaking Arabic and some of the Negro dialects with fluency, and in every way a mis-tress of her exceptional vocation. Restless and daring blood must run in her family. for she me daring blood must run in her family; for she was one of a household of explorers, and we believe that her sister was lost in the lands of the Upper Nile many years ago. In spite of her sex—like Ida Pfeiffer—Miss Tinne was born a discoverer, and the allurement of Africa, which never leaves the mind on which it has once seized, possessed her wholly.

"With regard to this last melancholy incident. our details are as yet too few to warrant specu-lation upon the object of the journey which the courageous young lady was pursuing, or upon the manner of her assassination. All that the report states is, that Miss Tinne was on the road between Ghoush and Mourzouk, with some of her yacht's crew and other attendants, when she was treacherously murdered by her camel-drivers, who killed at the same time two of the hapless lady's sailors. Mourzouk is a city of Fezzan, and the principal station on the road to Central Africa by way of Meshroo and Bilma. Unless the other town mentioned be 'Ghirzah,' mispelled by the narrator of this assassination, It is not plain whether Miss Tinne was to the north or south of Mourzouk when she was attacked and slaughtered. It may have been her design to penetrate by this road to Timbuctoo. for that was a plan which she had cherished, and there is a route to Lake Chad, and perhaps to the upper waters of the Niger or Joliba, by the tribes of the Tonariks. "More probably Miss Tinne was only making a journey into the interior of the Tripoli country; for we gather from the account that her yacht was at the port of that name; and her friends seem to have started from Malta for the scene of the murder to investigate and punish the crime—an errand likely to be futile, if the unfortunate adventuress had been to the south of Mourzouk. Of course, people who travel in these burning expanses of Africa—especially when they are women—go at their own peril. In Europe the person of a lady would be safe enough; but among those black Moslems there is no chivalrous feeling about the sex—the tone of the Koran and the institution of polygamy place it out of the question. "Even an Arab camel-driver, who is usually

'Even an Arab camel-driver, who is usually as common a scoundrel as can be found, would think it disgraceful to belong to a 'Kafilah' commanded by 'a girl;' and if, as is most likely, Miss Tinne displayed money or goods when she got outside the range of the Tripoli Government, we can too easily comprehend how the temptation arose and was obeyed. Coming just when we are debating the reasons which keep Dr. Livingstone so long away, the new incident has particular elements of sadness; but, brave as Miss Tinne was, she was but a woman, and it is far worse to have to do with these Tibbons and Soudan people south of the Barbary coast than with the agricultural negroes through whose territories we hope the famous missionary is now passing.

racy of office-holders in this county begin to see their mistake in regarding the Republican party as their servant when it is their master.

So long lost, and so long wrapped in the triple brass of their own selfishness, this fact begins to overwhelm their weak vision; that the people themselves are the power behind the throne-stronger, because founded on the principles of justice, than the throne itself. Our babes and sucklings in office do not send forth words of wisdom, but unpack their hearts with lies against any man, true enough, or bold enough, or brave enough to declare that it is a crime against Republicanism herself to put men into the Custom House because of their vices.

During the reign of James the 1st, sometimes called Buchanan, he was arraigned for trampling upon the people's rights in the vain endea-vor to throttle the nation's will, and thrust John C. Breckenridge into the Presidential chair, to serve our Southern enemies, and barter away our liberties. The people spurned Buchanan. So will they spurn this "insolence of office" in the county of Camden, which would dictate the triumph of the "Ring" and rule or ruin. The following is the first Mititary order from the Camden Postmaster, so gallant in war, so generous and truthful in office: --

POST OFFICE, CANDEN, N. J., ) To Andrew Turner, Postmaster, Camden county, Dear Sir:

Dear Sir: Scovel is indeavoring to create a difficulty in our Party again, and I under-stand has been at work in your District. I understand you elect delegates to the County Convention, on Monday evening. It would be un-fortunate if he should elect any of the delegates, as I am satisfied he is playing into the hands of the Democrats. If you can do anything to prevent it, it will oblige, Yours, respectfully, R. H. LEE. (Which is Postmaster.) The dog that flees the running brook gives no more evidence of madness than does a "Ring" more evidence of madness than does a "Ring" Republican when he bears that dreadful name which heads the noble Postmaster's circular .-'Scovel!

We make fight for Republican principles with Republican arms inside the Party lines, whence we cannot be driven.

We propose to present to U. S. Grant, Presi-dent, the names of the Collector of this district and the Postmaster at Camden, both appointees of the late Andrew Johnson, for misdemeanor in office in interfering with the freedom of elections. Friends and citizens! Manhood is degraded by submission to tyranny. Falsehood and calumny cannot save the "Ring." Like the empty egg-shell of the Rebellion lay the heavy hand of truth upon its empty shell, and it is crushed into powder. Forward! Courage! and may God defend the right.
