

A Stealer View of the Stowe Scandal. To the Editor of the Evening Telegraph.

The newspaper press, while steadily declaring that the subject is unfit for general reading, persistently keeps it before the public by ill-natured and harsh criticism of Mrs. Stowe in the Byron article.

It has been called by every disagreeable and odious appellation to be found in the language. "A hideous story," "A disgusting revelation," "A frightful skeleton disintegrated," etc. etc. Abusive epithets will make the matter no better, will not right any wrong, nor elevate the writers in the estimation of a just and discriminating mind.

In view of the apparent honesty of purpose, and generous motive of justifying a misrepresented lady, let us have a little charity, and at least suspend judgment of Mrs. Stowe till a further hearing. An age which furnishes apologists for Judas Iscariot, and abundance of doubters of the authority and wisdom of the great Teacher himself, may be mistaken in estimating the exact amount of odium which should attach to a disclosure in itself not pleasant, but which, by the severe and just laws of retribution, may be visited on crime to remote generations.

Mrs. Stowe is able to defend herself, and doubtless will, in a way as conclusive as was the key to her former work. Gentlemen of the press, American and English, forbear a little. If this recital has been prompted by feelings magnanimous and true, it cannot be evil in its results.

All "good intentions" are certainly not applied to the "paving" process in a celebrated Toronto locality.

"There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough how they come as we will."
