LITEBATURE.

REVIEW OF NEW BOOKS.

-From Turner Brothers & Co. we have received "The Writings of Madame Swetchine," translated by H. W. Preston. Published by Roberts Brothers. This volume of Madame Swetchine's literary remains is edited by Count de Falloux, the author of the life of Madame Swetchine recently published by Roberts Brothers, and to which it forms an appropriate supplement. These scattered thoughts of a remarkable religious enthusiast will be valued by those who have been interested in the perusal of her life, and Christian readers of all classes will find in them much that is worth treasuring up in the memory. They reveal the inner life of Madame Swetchine more perfectly than any biography could do, and disconnected as they are, they nevertheless are even more valuable than would be a finished work, as showing the modes of thought and the religious impressions of the writer.

From the same house we have received "Nidworth," by E. Prentiss, also published by Roberts Brothers. This is a more than usually interesting moral story for young people by a writer who has achieved considerable popularity. It has a higher aim than any of her previous works, and it is distinguished by a fanciful and poetical feeling that is somewhat rare in books of this class. -Claxton, Remsen & Haffelfinger send us

"The History of Joseph Bonaparte," by John S. C. Abbott. Published by Harper & Brothers. This is a new volume of Mr. Abbott's series of popular histories, which, according to the author, had the endorsement of Mr. Lincoln, who said that all his knowledge of history was derived from them, Perhaps it would have been just as well if Mr. Lincoln had dipped a little deeper into history than the writings of Mr. Abbott go. These books, however, in their place are useful: but as the author's Bonapartist proclivities are well known, it is just as well to make due allowances for them in this and the other sketches of the Bonaparte family. Joseph Bonaparte, the subject of the present work, was a remarkable man, about whom too little is known, and this biography, although strongly colored by Mr. Abbott's prejudices, will be a valuable addition to his juvenile historical series.

-From T. B. Peterson & Brothers we have received "The Prince of Darkness," a new romance by Mrs. Southworth, the title of which is alone sufficient to make the fortunes of the publishers and author.

The same house sends us "Major Jones" Sketches of Travel," an amusing work that was popular a good many years ago.

-From Barclay & Co., No. 610 Arch street, we have received a German translation of "Poe's Raven," by Carl Theodore Eben. This version was published several years ago, with other translations by Mr. Eben of American poems, and it attracted much attention on account of its remarkable fidelity in letter and spirit to the original. In the edition before us the translator has made a number of improvements, and he has added a biographical sketch of Poe.

- From the American Sunday-School Union we have received "Amy Russell," a religious story for children.

-D. Ashmead sends us the seventh monthly part of Appleton's Journal, which contains the weekly numbers for October.

-The November number of The Nursery is made attractive by easy stories and verses suited to the capacity of the very youngest readers, and it is as full of pretty pictures as a Christmas pudding is of plums.

-The November number of Good Health contains a number of excellent practical articles on diet, exercise, and other matters tha everybody ought to be posted about. There is much interesting matter in this magazine. independently of its utilitarian character.

The Huntsville (Ala.) Democrat reports this interesting condition of affairs in the South:—
We learn that on the night of October 14, a band of armed men went to the house of old man Whiteco ton, on the Poles plantation, in Jackson county, or the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, about 18 miles east of Huntsville, and, after shooting into the house, went in and carried off the old man and his son, and they have not been heard of since. The Whitecottons have been regarded as desperadoes. Two of the family were killed some time ago in a fight with the Woodall family, near Wootville. A fend has existed between the families for several years, and we understand there is great hostility to the Whitecottons in all that region. It is thought probable that the Whitecottons have been killed or driven out of the country. Without knowing any thing of the merits of the present case, we can but epeat our former condemnation of such illegal pro

The Amenities of Political Life. Governor Clayton, of Arkansas, was serenaded at Little Rock a few evenings ago, and made a speech, taking ground in favor of removing the disabilities of the ex-Confederates. The speech caused a sensation in Little Rock, for Clayton has heretofore been regarded as a bigoted and intolerant radical partisan. The extremists of his own party denounced him severely for what they called his treachery to Republicanism, and one of them, General Catterson, Republicanism, and one of them, General Catterson, provoked a rencontre with him on the steps of the State House. As Governor Clayton was descending the steps last Monday morning, General Catterson accosted him and charged him with selling out his party. The Governor denied the accusation, when Catterson asserted that he could prove that the Governor was in consultation with the leading Democrats a few nights previous. Governor Clayton called his accuser a liar; Catterson replied that the Governor himself was a liar, and the Governor Governor himself was 2 ligr, and the Governor struct him a blow on the temple with his fist. Catterson did not return the blow, declaring that he would as seon strike a woman as a one-armed man. The bystanders intervened and prevented further altercation; but the speech is said to be the sole topic of discussion at Little Rock.

Ministerial Differences. Here is a funny paragraph from a late English paper:—"The Rev. Thomas Hugo, the rector of West Hackney, applied at the Worship Street Police Court for a summons against an open-air preacher. Mr. Hugo said that he and other inhabitants of the parish wished steps to be taken to put an end to a great nuisance. A number of open-air preachers were in the habit of assembling on a piece of waste ground near the parish church, where they should out their opinions on religious subjects. Placards of an inflammatory tendency were also exhibited, and statements made reflecting upon himself and one of his curates, tending to provoke a breach of the peace. Mr. Newton asked in what way, Mr. Hong said that his men had suppressed a purching of the peace. Arr. Sewon asced in what way, Mr. Hugo said that his men had suggested a punching of the preachers' heads, and really he thought that if the huisance went on much longer he should not hinder them from carrying the suggestion into effect. The summons asked for was granted.

An Ancedote of Mailbran.

Mailbran, in her younger days, did not like to sing "Desdemona" on the stage, and was absolutely frightened by her father, Garcia, who played "Othelle," and who told her that if she did not come up to his expectations he would kill her on the spot, for which purpose he should on that night take a real dagner instead of a stage one. The night arrived and Mailbran achieved quite a success, but in the last act, as "Othelle" was stealing up to the recumbent "Pesdemona," a shrill scream rang through the house, and M. libran jumping up from the couch rushed off the stage. The curtain was let down and the opera came to an untimely end. Mailbran was missing, searched for by the police, but for two days she could not be found. Then she was discovered hiding behind some timber in a timber yard, half dead with fright and starvation. This incident occurred in this city during her engagement, we believe, at the Bowery Theatre. Ever after, after singit g the part of "Desdemona," Mailbran would be reized by a fainting fit.

Lively Time in a Convent.

The Cologne Gazette gives the world some particulars of a painful quariel which is said to have happened at the Augustinian Convent of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, at Rome, a few days ago. It seems that the brother who had charge of the kitchen—or, in other words, the cook—had been ordered by the superior to go to another convent. The reason for this order is not known, but it probably was given in consequence of the brother's skill in the culinary art not being approved by the other brethren. On receiving this order the brother, who was in the kitchen at the time, seized a knife and scratched the superior severely. He had not calculated on his antagonist. No sooner did the superior feel the abrasure of his skin than he rushed on his assallant, and a deadly struggle ensued. The superior and the cook, locked in each other's arms, rolled on the floor; the other brethren, altracted by the mose, appeared on the field of strife, and by their excited exclamations added to the terror of the same reise, appeared on the field of strife, and by their excited exciamations added to the terror of the scene. Some sided with the superior, others with the cook, until at last they all mingled in the fray. So ficreely did the battle rage that a body of gendernes, whose quarters were near the convent, rushed in to separate the combatants. The erring cook was led to a monastic prison, in a sadiy battered condition, for the amoring them as a few with the second condition. condition, for the superior, though scratched himself and very old, had knocked out no less than three of his antagonist's reeth with one blow of his aged that; and it was admitted on all sides that he had far the best of the fight at the moment when the gendarmes
