HARRISBURG

The Governor's Private Secretary-His Statement-Attorney-General F.

THE GEARY-BREWSTER IMBROGLIO.

C. Brewster's Statement-Opinion of General Hartranft.

From Our Oun Correspondent,

HARRISBURG, Nov. 3, 1869. It is conceded on all sides that further discussion of the Geary-Brewster affair can result in no possible benefit to any concerned, and yet there has been much left unsaid that should be said. As we look upon it, Governor Geary owes it to himself and the public to answer the charges made against him by the ex-Attorney-General, and which have been scattered far and near by the press and the tongue of gossip, the advice of those about him to the contrary notwithstanding. With this view of the matter, and actuated by a determination to present to the readers of THE TELEGRAPH such facts in regard to the matter as came into our possession, we waited upon his Excellency this morning, and had the misfortune to find him confined to his bed-room by a severe attack of swelling of the tonsils. When we announced ourself as one of THE TELEGRAPH'S staff, we naturally expected to receive a gentle admonition to "get up and dust," but our expectations were not realized, for despite the strong and not commendable language of the gentleman who did us the kindness to present our names, the Governor actually consented to see us, and in all probability would have done so had his expressed wish not been frustrated by the commands of his physician and the earnest advice of his wife. He excused himself, very properly, on the ground that it was painful for him to converse, and we left the Executive Mansion, and did the next best thing possible, by the seeing and hearing the Governor's Man Friday, who is also his Private Secretary. Seeing the Private Secretary of Governor Geary is no great thing to brag of; but hearing him is really tremendous, when we recollect the fact that the Private Secretary is. and has been for we can't say how many years, the shadow of the Governor. Certainly no man should know another-no two mer/should be better acquainted-than the Governor and his faithful friend an Mollower. We state this, not because the Private Secretary desires it, for he begs to be kept out of the newspapers, but because, without it, the statement which the Secretary makes would probably be stripped of the weight that should cling to it, and our labor of love thus completely lost.

The Private Secretary is not what might be called a handsome man, that is, he can't be classed among the Appollos, but then he has such a snavwinning way about him, that one really is drawn to ward him without any other reason than that which has been known to bid a man put his fist under a pon derous trip hammer and have it smashed, or to fall off of every place where there may be a great likelihood of his being dashed to pieces. It is not certain, beyond the peradventure of a doubt, but it is reported that the Private Secretary has, and frequently does, take the helm and run the gallant old ship of state entirely alone and unaided, even by the Governor himself, and the most enjoyable part of it is, that the passengers have never been the wiser of it Now it is not to be presumed that the Governor is not capable of doing all this himself, everybody who knows anything knows that he has and can run the ship completely to his own satisfaction, if not to the satisfaction of everybody else; and there we leave the subject, to turn to that which the reader, by this time, has commenced to look for-we mean the interview. A word more as a sort of introductory. The Private Secretary is as modest as he is important, and it will surprise nobody more than himself when he comes to learn that during one, two, or three hours' conversation with him, we were doing nothing more or less than subjecting him to the now most fashionable fashion of interviewing him. We are compelled to admit that it was not our intention to subject the gentleman to this interesting process, but our conversation was of such a nature that we feel in justice was as follows :-

The Private Secretary's Statement. He commenced by stating that THE EVENING Telegraph was mistaken. Anybody who ever said Governor Geary was a liar was a miserable, cowardly, etc. etc., liar himself. He, the Secretary, had been with him twenty years, and never knew him to tell a lie! The interview, as we have before mentioned, lasted some hours, but the reader has an advantage over us, for what we received in that time he has in a few words. Our next step was to find the new Attorney-General. Having been directed to the apartment set aside for the law business of the Commonwealth, we entered, and found the ever amiable Mr. Brewster at his desk, deep in the business of his office. Although a stranger to him, he greeted us cordially, and invited us to be seated. We opened the conversation by an inquiry as to how the gentleman liked the atmosphere of Harrisburg. We received for an answer that where a man's duty called him it was his place to make it as agreeable as possible. next inquired concerning some matters that were to have come before the Governor to-day, and were assured that the Executive would be unable to attend to any business whatever, and therefore the case would have to be postponed. We now introduced ourselves as one of the grand army of interviewers, and asked the Attorney-General how he would like to submit himself to a couple of hours of that interesting process. He smilingly replied that, if his desires were ever so great, it would be impossible for him to gratify us, as it was necessary that he should visit the Governor immediately. The following conversation then ensued:-Attorney-General F. C. Brewster's Statement.

Correspondent-Mr. Brewster, the letter of the ex-Attorney-General to the Governor is making a great deal of noise. What do you think of it? Attorney-General-Well, sir, I do not know that I could enlighten you much on the subject. Correspondent-But don't you think that the Governor owes it to himself to reply to the charges made by Mr. Brewster? Attorney-General-I have advised him to pay no attention to the matter; although, as you say, there are some things to be explained. Correspondent-Of course, there are two sides to almost all questions, and thus far the statements of Mr. Brewster remain unanswered and uncontra-Attorney-General-Well, I believe that the gentlemen who made the statements were mistaken.

Correspondent-What do you think of Mr. Covode's letter? Attorney-General-Weli, I presume that Mr. Covode was aware of the strong influences being brought to bear on the Governor, and acting on the knowledge that the Governor felt that the Attorney-General was weakening him, wrote the letter. Correspondent-Don't you think that the Governor authorized the use of his name?

Attorney-General-I certainly cannot tell how it came about, but I scarcely think that the Governor. in the face of an exciting campaign, would resort to such a mode of procedure, no matter what he might have felt in regard to the matter.

Correspondent-The worst feature about the matter is that, as the people now understand it, the Governor professed the warmest friendship for Mr. Brewster, at the very time he was desiring his removal from office.

Attorney-General-Well, sir, I presume that a Governor has a right to change his lawyer, just the same as he would change his doctor.

Correspondent-Yes, but the Governor had no occasion to profess warm friendship when he wished the Attorney-General to clear out, Attorney-General-I see no good reason why a man should not profess friendship, simply because he desires to change his lawyer. The change from one lawyer to another does not necessitate a bitterness of feeling.

letter be true, did the Governor refuse the resignation of the Attorney-General when it was offered him, and avow that Mr. Brewster should not leave

Attorney-General-Well, I suppose that this could all be explained very satisfactorily to all concerned, but you newspaper people have such a fashion of feeding the reading public that there is nothing short of a murder or an assassination suits you any more or contents the people. Correspondent-That may be very true, sir, but we chronicle events as they occur, and if no murders take place, why we are compelled by force of circumstances to be satisfied. Attorney-General-Yes, but you make such little sparks bring forth such a large flame. We had been walking along the street during the greater part of this conversation, and, finding that it (the conversation) was likely to assume a rather wide scope, we bid the Attorney-General good morning and went on our way.

In the afternoon, again having business at the Capitol, we paid a short visit to the Attorney-General, and found him situated the same as we had found him in the morning.

The conversation opened immediately. Correspondent-Some people are making a great talk about the appointment of the new Assistant Attorney-General. Atterney-General-I do not know much about him, although I find him a most excellent lawyer for one of his years. He comes to me most highly recommended. Why, I am being picked to pieces by the newspapers all over the country. Some of them would strip me of what, for the sake of my children, I hold most dear-my good name; they call me a corrupt judge because I decided against Mr. Sheppard. Now no man thinks more highly of Mr. Sheppard than I do. He is a noble, upright gentleman, and I would giadly welcome him back to his position as District Attorney. They have sitched into my arithmetic, and say can't count; well, perhaps I did make a mistake in not allowing Mr. Sheppard the naturalized vote, but I thought I was right, and my colleagues felt so too. Why, they go further than that; just now they are picking my Latin to pieces, and say I am not up in the classics. Well, perhaps that is my most vulnerable point.

After a few other remarks on minor topics, and giving our name and address, we took our leave, fully impressed with the idea that, whatever else can be said in regard to the new Attorney-General, one thing is certain, and that s, that no man can accuse him of a want of gentility, Our next visit was to General Hartranft, With that cordiality for which the Auditor-General is noted, we were welcomed to his apartments, and after changing the salutations of the day, we asked for an expression of opinion on the Geary-Brewster affair. We received the following characteristic

"This is none of my fight, and therefore I have no pinion to express, The subject turned to loans and taxes, and we oon after withdrew.

NEW-YORKISMS.

From Our Own Correspondent. NEW YORK, Nov. 4, 1869.

"References Exchanged." Some idea of the accommodations, in the way of board and lodging, to be obtained in this city of New York, may perhaps be discovered among the following siftings which I have made from a batch of etters on the subject lying before me. A few days ago, under the instigation of the evil one, and with no desire whatever to change the quarters in which I have enseanced myself for the winter. I put an advertisement in the Herald, worded something in this

BOARD WANTED-For gentleman and wife, in good locality, below Thirtieth street, with first-class ac-commodations. References exchanged. Address, stating terms and details, Ali Baba, Box —, P. O. The next day I was in the receipt of seventy-three letters, written in all varieties of grammar, rhetoric, and punctuation, and suited to the humblest capacity. Different as these letters were in everything else, the majority of them agreed in this, that the rooms and board offered by the writers were perfeetly unexceptionable in every respect, and that they belonged to a private family who were receiving boarders for the first time. I might also add that each of the localities was accessible to cars and stages, and that the best of references were given and required. If these things be so, why are Smith, Jones, and Robinson and their wives discontented, grouping around month after month, from place to place, and grimly arguing that no such thing as solid comfort is purchasable at moderate prices in the great boardng-house named New York? Why does Mrs. Saliy Manger discover that "home comforts" mean an endless course of cold ham three times a day, and that the "socialities of a private family" are synonymous with the united smell of salt mackerel and Irish stew? Why, when one half of New York has moderate expectations and a disposition to be accommodated, and the other half devotes its life to furnishing luxurious homes at moderate terms, and advertising them-why should the right people be continually getting into the wrong houses? The old rule tells us that where one party is auxious to please and the other anxious to be pleased, mutual satisfaction would be the result. But the rule does not seem to hold good in regard to advertisers and advertisees, particularly when the parties are seeking board and boarders. Of these seventy answers, the average terms demanded are $35 per week. A few parties in West Twenty-seventh and West Twenty-ninth streets ask 20, including fire and gas, but this is so cheap that unless one has been singularly uncomfortable at home, he will not be sanguine of finding many home comforts at these terms. A parlor and bedroom on the second floor, on Union Square, for $60 per week, looks more promising; and Union Square is a large, open, healthy spot. Equal accommodations are offered in Irving Place, in the immediate vicinity of the Academy of Music and Steinway Hall, for $40 per week. Another party, writing n delicate Italian hand, gives the assurance that she offers a "genuine refined home," with "English and German cooking," the "best the market affords," and "no signs of a boarding-house anywhere," for $50 per week. At this number on Fourth avenue a fine room can be obtained, with hot and cold water, fire and gas, and the inevitable "home comforts," at $35 per week. The lessee of this house in West Twenty-second street refuses to commit herself by mentioning any terms, but says that the terms are 'reasonable to a desirable party," From the next note all the information I receive is compressed into the following line:-"In answer to your advertisement please call at number -, East Twenty-seventh street." A lady, evidently an old maid, residing in West Fourteenth street, near Fifth avenue, writes that she has some back pariors to let, which, she seductively adds, will "save exposure." Charming modesty! A boarding-house keeper in St. Mark's Place states that her terms are "low," and avoids all other statements; another one, opposite Gramercy Park, begs to explain that her terms cannot be stated unless she knows what is required. Mrs. W., writing from West Twentyfourth street, says that her price, for two, 19 $40 ber week, "which is very low for the accommodations." An English widow, who has a brownstone front in Winthrop Place, concludes her note thus:-"Best of references given. Likewise a third-story back room." Another widow, in West Fourteenth street, says, as a very decided recommendation, that she has "a very large parior, with only six persons in the house, at thirty dollars." And in West Twenty-eighth street, two quietly disposed individuals (as a man and his wife usually are !) can have board and home comforts and a first-rate table at $25 per week, apiece. You will therefore see that pleasant board in Gotham is not an impossibility, provided you have the $50 per week, with the surplus necessary for nables, a pew in a fashionable church, and other incidentals. The Vanderbilt Statue. The unveiling of the famous Vanderbilt statue, which has been erected at a cost of balf a million dollars, will take place next Wednesday. An extensive feed will celebrate the event, at which all the professional diners-out and hungry Bohemians in New York will assist. I don't care much about seeing the statue unveiled, but I own I should like to see those plates go up and that champagne gobbled to the health of the noble, the high-minded, the disinterested, the generous, the patriotic Vanderbilt. I should like to see that, if it did not necessitate my being present at it!

clothing, amusements, carriage-hire, doctors, nurses,

The Fire-tilrt Scorpion. Byron has some intensely poetic imagery in regard to the scorpion girt with tire, to which he compares a mind that broods o'er guilty woes; but the unrelenting course which Mr. Dana has pursued towards Horace Greeley might furnish him, were he living, with a better example both of the one and the other. He has all the bitterness of the disappointed and the desperate man, and stings himself in the blind fury with which he pours forth his venom upon other people. His hatred has no magnanimity about it, and I have heard many men, not distinguished for superhuman nobility of disposition, express disgust at the paltry personalities in which, alone, his enmity can find gratification. A candid, outspoken hater is infinitely preferable to the cunning eulogist, whose smooth sarcasms are full of oil-oil of vitriol. The Women.

The Sorosis, the Women's Suffrage Association, and the Women's Council are all keeping quiet just at present. Their leading spirits are absent, and the deserted associations need some of these chieftainesses' fire. It is said that Miss Anthony has lectured herself quite ill, but I presume it would be wrong to name the disease St. Authony's Fire. ALI BABA.

BUILDING IMPROVEMENTS. - In our travels through the city of Philadelphia in search of news for the readers of THE TELEGRAPH, we are compelled to notice the improveents in the way of new buildings. etc. A recent tramp out Market street displayed to our view the handsome new quarters of our friend M. Marshall, at the corner of Thirteenth. It is always a gratifying duty for us to pronicle the erection of buildings intended for trade and commerce. Among this class of improvements, the new store occupied by M. Marshall, northwest corner of Thirteenth and Market streets, holds a prominent position The building fronts on Market street thirty-five feet, and on Thirteenth street, constituting one of the most attractive business edifices in Philadelphia. Mr. Marshall has occupied this well known stand during ten years, and has established a first-class trade. His substantial prosperity has been secured by an attentive study of the retirements of his numerous customers, and by an undeviating system of fair dealing. The qualities of every article sold by Mr. Marshall are just as represented, and his prices are uniformly low. If you wish a prescription rightly put together, or a wholesale order tilled with promptness, this looks to us as the place and Wr. Marshall e man to do it. Occupying, as he does, two fronts on Market street, he has large facilities for carrying on the drug | usiness in all its branches. Besides the dispensing of fine rugs, we notice that he intends, in connection with that branch, to deal in window-glass both of French and American manufacture, together with paints, oils,
