THE FUNERAL OF MR. PEABODY.

FUNERAL ceremonies will take place to-day in London over the remains of the late George Peabody, the Queen, the ministers, and all classes of society uniting to pay extraordinary honors to his memory, and to testify in the most unmistakable manner to their appreciation of his philanthropic services.

The Queen, during Mr. Peabody's life-time, in a right royal but womanly manner endeavored to show to Mr. Peabody how deeply she was touched by his magnificent gifts to the poor of London, and the presentation of her portrait and the writing of an autograph letter, although of themselves but small returns for the more than royal generosity of the American merchant, were all that her Majesty had power to do under the circumstances; they were complete and emphatic expressions of her feelings, and as such were appreciated by Mr. Peabody and by the world at large.

As soon as the death of Mr. Peabody was announced the Queen made haste to show her deep regret and her respect for his memory, by ordering that his funeral services should be performed in Westminster Abbey, and that his remains should be interred in the royal vault until their transmission to America. It is doubtful whether such honors as these have ever been conferred upon a foreigner before in England, much less upon a simple citizen.

But this American had a royal soul, and in his enlightened philanthropy and practical benevolence, in the bestowal of his immense wealth for the benefit of his less fortunate fellow-creatures, he set an example that the wealthy princes and nobles of England might well follow.

A funeral in Westminster Abbey, and an interment in the royal vault, can add nothing to the estimation in which Mr. Peabody's good deeds are held, but they are important as showing the desire on the part of the Queen, in particular, to testify in the strongest manner to the value of his services. A war vessel has been ordered to convey the remains of Mr. Peabody to America, and with this last mark of respect the public honors to his memory by the English Government will end. The dwellings erected by his money for the deserving poor of London will remain, however, as permanent monuments to keep the memory of his good deeds ever fresh in the minds of succeeding generations.

STATUE OF ADMIRAL STEWART.

A RESOLUTION was passed yesterday in Common Council creating a joint committee of three from each Chamber to erect a bronze statue of Admiral Charles Stewart, at an expense not exceeding $10,000, which, when it reached the Select Branch, was referred to the Finance Committee. There is no doubt that the great naval hero richly deserves this testimonial of respect, and we hope the time will come when Fairmount Park will be adorned with marble and bronze monuments of patriotic and distinguished Philadelphians.

THE CENSUS OF 1870.

COUNCILS yesterday adopted a resolution providing for the appointment of a joint special committee of five members from each chamber to confer with the United States authorities in regard to the preliminary arrangements for the next census, so far as it affects this city. The necessity of some action of this kind was made painfully manifest by the census returns of 1860, which gave a very imperfect and incomplete report of our wealth and population. This subject deserves the most attentive consideration. There is a rapid increase in the practical value of statistics, and the uses to which they are applied; and it is a serious disadvantage, in many respects, to a community to be rated below its proper rank. The municipal system of gathering statistics, although it has been greatly improved during the last few years, is still imperfect, but this is owing in a great measure to the fact that it has been proposed, in the national census, to make a full and correct statement of all the facts bearing upon wealth, population, and property paramount to all other objects, and to give every possible assurance that the census returns will not be used in any way as a basis for either national, State, or municipal taxation. If this understanding universally prevailed, the city, in co-operation with the national officers, should be able to secure a very close approximation to the actual truth.

in all important statistical matters; and while facts affecting individuals would be carefully concealed from the public gaze, the aggregates would be faithfully summed up, and the world enlightened in regard to our true standing.

THE TWELFTH AND SIXTEENTH STREETS RAILWAY.

THE authors of the Twelfth and Sixteenth Streets Passenger Railway project suffered that enterprise to lie dormant until the elections were over. They evidently feared that if the people were reminded during the idea of October of the shameful manner in which the bill had been hurried through the Legislature, they would give an expression to their indignation at the polls which would be neither complimentary nor agreeable. But as soon as the political results were officially declared, arrangements were made to tear up the doomed streets without the sanction of the city authorities; and a resolution was adopted by Common Council yesterday instructing the Chief Commissioner of Highways to report by what authority they are now tearing up Twelfth street. It remains to be seen whether this demonstration is to be vigorously followed up by a full test of the right of the Legislature to grant valuable franchises, created at the expense of the city to its favorites, without so much as saying "by your leave." If the principle of such legislation is tamely recognized, it is only a question of time when the right to build passenger railways on Broad street will be granted to partisan schemers, and when the thoroughfares of Fairmount Park are also handed over to their tender mercies.

OBITUARY.

THE Hon. Amos Kendall. The death of the Hon. Robert J. Walker at the national capital is followed quickly by that of a man who was even more powerful in the councils of the nation in the day of his prime, and who was possessed of many rare and noble qualities which give him a substantial claim to the honor of statesmanship. Between the years 1830 and 1840, the man whose name heads this article was regarded as one of the most potential in the nation. The following extract from Miss Martineau's "Retrospect of Western Travel," written in 1857, gives a vivid description of the almost superstitious awe in which the power behind the throne of Jackson was held:— "I was fortunate enough once to catch a glimpse of the invisible Amos Kendall, one of the most remarkable men in America. He is supposed to be the moving spring of the whole administration; the thinker, planner and doer; but it is in the dark. Documents are issued of an excellence which prevents their being attributed to persons who take the responsibility of them; a correspondence is kept up all over the country for which no one seems to be answerable; work is done, of golden extent and with golden speed, which makes men look about them with a superstitious wonder; and the invisible Amos Kendall has the credit of it all. President Jackson's letters to his cabinet are said to be Kendall's; the reports sent to the President are said to be Kendall's; the letters sent from Washington to appear in remote country newspapers, when they are collected and published in the Globe, are said to be Kendall's; every mysterious paragraph in opposition newspapers relates to Kendall; and it is his will that is obeyed in the most important departments of the administration, not to do anything well. But he is undoubtedly a great genius. He mixes with the great talent for silence a special audacity. The extreme selfishness of his complexion, and hair of such perfect whiteness as is rarely seen in a man of middle age, testified to disease. His countenance does not help to give to his appearance the appearance of a man who probably is not devoid of this superstitious to help away, for there is no calculating how much influence was given to Jackson by the aid of his secretary. It is believed that there was a concealed eye and hand behind the machinery of government by which every thing could be done that he wished to do. A member of Congress told me this night that he had watched through four sessions for a sign of Kendall, and had never obtained it till now. Kendall was leaning on his head, and had his head down and eye glancing up at a number of Congress with whom he was in earnest conversation, and in a few minutes he was gone."

Disinheritance.

Disinheritance of children by their fathers does not carry much weight, even among the favored heirs in Kentucky, as the following paragraph from the Louisville Courier-Journal shows:— "The Mason Circuit Court has been engaged since Monday morning last in the trial of an interesting will case. In August, 1856, John K. Key, of Mason county, made his will, leaving all his real and personal estate equally divided between his two daughters, and to be held for their separate and exclusive use during their natural lives. He left four sons, but no part of the estate is devised to them. The whole six children unite in contesting the validity of the will, and the two daughters are witnesses against the capacity of the father at the time he made it. (George Francis Trade and Free Trade. Train set the following challenge (a cat can challenge a king) to Professor Perry and others at Milwaukee:— "To Professor Perry, Blanchard, Deimar, Brinkerhoff, Simon Stern, Mahon Sande, or any other of the Champions of the Free Trade League:—In the name of three millions of wretched, ignorant, and penniless, foundries, and industrial workers; in the name of two millions working men employed therein; in the name of five millions of women and children who depend on us to keep them from starvation; in the name of England's pauper workhouse system—most respectfully I invite you to debate this tariff question before the people, whenever it may meet your pleasure. I believe that free trade means England, protection means America. I have challenged Donnelly, at St. Paul, and hope some of you will meet me in Geneva or combat. Address: Sherman, Boston, Chicago. GEO. FRANCIS TRADE."

State War Debt.

As a result of the war, the State War Debt, in the payment of her debts. In a table prepared in the Internal Revenue Office, we find a statement showing the difference between the assessments and the actual collections of the same. The assessments for all the States and Territories amounted in round numbers to $188,000,000. The collections reached $175,000,000, leaving a deficiency of $13,000,000. The following table shows the amount of the debt in each State:—

Wooden vs. Paper Boats.

Mr. Stephen Roberts, of this city, in answer to the challenge alluded to in the Times of Friday, as having been put forth by the Fairmount Park Commissioners, writes as follows:— "What Mr. Waters calls a paper boat is two-thirds wood. The stem is brass; the keel, seats, gunwales, and washboards are of wood. All that is paper about it is the outside covering. The judges at the Fair knew more about soap than about boats. If they had been boatmen, boat-builders, or boat-rovers, they would not have asked to make a rocking-cradle of a boat. The proper test, outside of rowing in the water, is weight, and in that I beat Waters by ten pounds, besides having twenty more inches in length than his boat. I am ready to test my boat with any boat that can be built by him; but I should like him to make a real paper boat, not one two-thirds wood, to row against mine. He has tried several four-oared boats, and the oarsmen all complained that it is the paper part of them. My boat was not built to go to the Fair, but to be rowed by Walter Brown in England. The assessment company refused to take her on Mr. Brown's terms, and I then entered her in the Fair, not expecting to contend for any prize."

office he invited his first Postmaster-General, William F. Barry, of Kentucky, to a participation in the discussions of the Cabinet, and the incumbent of the office has ever since been regarded as one of the constitutional advisers of the Executive. Mr. Kendall was continued in the position by Martin Van Buren until the last year of the latter's administration, holding the office a little over five years. When he entered upon the duties of the office he found the department in a state of embarrassing disorder and inebriety. Within a single year he succeeded in completely reorganizing it and relieving it of the inebriety which had been so grievously felt therefor. In 1858, Congress adopted a plan suggested by him for placing it upon a substantial and effective working basis. It is no small credit to his sagacity to state that from that time there has been no material change in the working of the post office system of the country, which, as it at present exists, is a substantial monument to the memory of Amos Kendall.

In the latter part of May, 1840, Mr. Kendall retired from the Cabinet, for the purpose of enlisting all his energies in the momentous Presidential struggle which was then impending. The success of the Whigs put a temporary termination to his public career, which he chose to make permanent, refusing at the hands of President Polk a foreign mission, and devoting his entire time henceforth to the practice of his profession in Washington, where he continued to reside from the time of his withdrawal from the Cabinet to his last illness. For several years after his retirement from public life he was embarrassed by a suit against him instituted by certain mail contractors, but this was ultimately decided in his favor by the Supreme Court of the United States, and from the proceeds of his successful practice at the bar he left at his death an estate worth half a million of dollars, consisting principally of land investments in Washington and vicinity. Among the most important of his legal achievements were those in connection with the magnetic telegraph, Professor Morse having employed him for years as his counsel in the multitudinous litigations arising from infringements upon his invention. Mr. Kendall, although exercising such potent influence in the affairs of the country at one period, leaves scarcely anything as a permanent evidence of his great ability, except the admirable post office system he inaugurated. His only work was "A Life of Andrew Jackson, Private, Military, and Civil," commenced in 1844, but never completed.
